of the country, with 3,286 firms engaged in these lines.

More shoes are produced here than in St. Louis, Lynn, or any other city except Brockton. New York, with its trading population totaling in the city and suburbs 9,207,496, with 13,000,000 within a 100-mile radius and 23,000,000 in a 200-mile radius, is the greatest consuming market in the world and of the widest variety of goods.

Using a traffic year of 340 days, the Transit Commission's figures show an average of 728,307 daily commuting trips in and out of New York City, while the total daily traffic averaged 959,617 passengers. The Commission estimated from these figures the number of commuters as 364,153 and the number of daily visitors, including some from the commuting zone who paid full fair, at 130,650.

During 1925 the travel into and out of New York City totaled 385,410,632 passengers, of which the railroads carried 243,589,271.

The travel originating within 40 miles of the city in 1925, in the so-called metropolitan district, was 259,000,000 passengers, of which 146,000,000 were railroad commuters, 44,000,000 were other railroad passengers, 56,000,000 came and went by ferries, and the Hudson and Manhattan tubes handled 43,000,000. The latest figures available for 1925 show 107,918,242 passengers handled by the Hudson and Manhattan tubes alone.

Of the 190,000,000 railroad passengers, 60,000,000 were from Long Island, 33,000,000 from Westchester and Connecticut, and 97,000,000 from New Jersey.

In a day, 2,440 railroad trains enter the city, of which 327 bring commuters from 8 A. M. to 9 A. M.

The fact that New York City is one of the greatest summer resorts in the world is often overlooked even by New Yorkers themselves.

There are 124 hotels in New York with 46,038 rooms.

On April 1, 1925, New York City had 352,556 automobiles. Of these 253,052 were pleasure cars. It is estimated at the present time that there are over 500,000 automobiles in New York City.

The city has appropriated $20,500,000 for the purpose of constructing terminal markets in Bronx, Manhattan and Brooklyn. These will serve as storage houses and distributing centers for foodstuffs arriving in New York from all parts of the country.

The assessed valuations of New York City real and personal property in 1925 was:

What New York Eats.

The authorities of the Port of New York estimate, in the territory constituting the port, the approximate food consumption based on 8,000,000 population, allowing for children and infants, as equivalent to 6,240,000 adults, to be annually:

All meats, including provisions and poultry	1,401,983,220
Fish	178,464,000
Milk	1,921,328,000

Nearly 3,240,000 quarts of milk are consumed daily.

It is estimated in addition 1,000,000 cases of evaporated milk and 1,200,000 cases of condensed milk are used.

The city is one of the important live stock markets of the country, being fourth in the number of animals slaughtered.

The meals for the city require 1,800 cars daily to transport its foodstuffs.

To haul the food necessary annually would require a freight train of 4,000 miles in length.

The provision trade estimated there are 156,791,869 dozen eggs used annually.

Suburban and Farm Districts.

Westchester 425,795, Nassau 207,840, Rockland 56,379, Putnam 10,502, Orange 119,884, in New York State; Fairfield 320,936, in Connecticut; Bergen 210,703, Passaic 209,174, Essex 652,089, Union 200,175, Morris 82,694, Middlesex 162,334, Monmouth 104,925 and in New Jersey.

Within the adjacent sections of New Jersey, Connecticut, Westchester and Rockland counties, Long Island, there are many farms.

The Italian Market of Greater New York.

The Italian population of Greater New York amounts to 390,832, according to the last census. This constitutes 19.6% of the foreign born white population among the 36 foreign countries represented. Within the metropolitan area there are approximately 850,000 Italians.

This population is distributed by boroughs as follows:

Bronx	39,519
Brooklyn	138,245
Manhattan	184,546
Queens	19,794
Richmond	8,723

Most of the Italian population is engaged in gainful pursuits and every trade, business and profession has its Italian principals and Italian trade. The baking, stove and machinery trades employ the greatest number of Italians.

The Italian sections of the city are defined in the sixteen following outlines:

From Park St. to Christopher St. and from the Bowery to West Broadway.

From Madison and Roosevelt Sts. to 16th St., Bowery to river front.

From 26th St. and 7th Ave. to 40th St. and 11th Ave.

From 90th St. and First Ave. to 128th St. and river front, above 105th St. from Lexington Ave. to river.

From 14th St. and Morris Ave. to 156th St. and Morris Ave.

From 160th St. and Third Ave. east to Southern Boulevard up to 200th St.

Williamsbridge section, from 200th to 228th Sts. and White Plains Ave.

Williamsburg section.

South Brooklyn, principally Union, Columbia and President Sts., Borough Park from 38th St. to 62d St.

Part of Bensonhurst section.

Queens, from Third to 11th Sts. on Manhattan Ave.

Staten Island, St. George.

The Ozone Park section of Queens.

A section of Astoria and throughout Corona.

These sections are among the most thickly populated in the city.

There are 6,000 Italian grocery stores in New York and vicinity catering to both American and Italian trade.

There are 1,000 of these catering exclusively to the Italian trade.

In all other lines of merchandise the stores cater to a general trade.

There are 1,700 Italian bakers. In this connection in the American bakeries Italian bakers lead all others among the number of employees.

In the wholesale business on all products in food and other lines from Italy and other countries, the Italian jobbers sell the people of the entire nation.

The largest number of depositors in the savings and postal savings banks are of the Italian race.

The Jewish Market of New York.

Next to the American market the Jewish is probably the most important and most lucrative in New York City. There are 1,043,000 Jews living and working in the Metropolis. They are concentrated in several distinct sections. About 600,000 live in Manhattan, 375,000 in the Bronx, 550,000 in Brooklyn, 50,000 in Queens, and 25,000 in Richmond.

More than 5,000 grocery, dairy and delicatessen stores, 800 drug stores, 3,000 stationery and cigar stores, 6,000 kosher butcher stores, 700 shoe stores, 275 hardware stores, 250 paint stores, 250 furniture stores, 150 electrical stores, 13 theatres and several thousand dry goods and specialty shops are located in the Jewish sections and cater exclusively to Jewish trade.

There are twenty Yiddish theatres in Greater New York. There are 12 Jewish banks with 50 branches in the Jewish sections and have total resources of more than four hundred million dollars, of which about seventy-five millions are savings accounts.

The Jews of New York are engaged largely in mercantile and professional pursuits, a large number of them are skilled artisans employed in the needle, shoe and textile industries. These trades are highly unionized and the workers employed earn proportionately higher wages than workers in other industries.

Because of its compactness, the Jewish market is easily accessible to the American advertiser and can be merchandised at a proportionately low cost.

Bronx—Special Information

The Bronx covers an area of 42 square miles and has a water frontage on three sides. The water front at Port Morris, a section of The Bronx, touches water deep enough to accommodate trans-Atlantic liners, and in time it is expected that The Bronx will serve as terminus for trans-Atlantic trade.

More pianos and musical instruments are made in The Bronx than in any other part of the United States. The vast plants of the Estey and Welte-Mignon Piano companies are located here.

The Bronx has a wonderful system of parks and parkways, the total acreage amounting to 4,000 acres. The famous Bronx Park Botanical and Zoological Gardens are located here.

On April 1, 1925 the figures of State Tax Commission showed 23,773 passenger automobiles in the Bronx.

S., and in addition has 14 manufacturing buildings with a total area of over 7,000,000 square feet. These buildings occupy practically 300 acres, having almost 300 different tenants employing over 25,000 people.

Ships leave Brooklyn docks for almost every important port in the world.

Manhattan—Special Information

Manhattan is the main business and shopping center of New York City. Every day more than 2,000,000 people enter this borough from Bronx, Brooklyn, Queens, Richmond and Westchester County, Long Island and New Jersey. These people work and shop in Manhattan during the day and return to the surrounding boroughs and counties at night. There are 982,000 residents and transients in Manhattan every night below Fifty-ninth Street, which territory is less than half the total area of the borough. Most of the large motion picture theatres and all but three of the theatres showing legitimate productions are located here. The great majority of large department stores and high-class specialty shops are in Manhattan.

Although Manhattan is a great business center, its residential features are continually being improved. In 1925 permits were issued for the construction of 278 residence buildings at an estimated cost of $129,108,000. Queens has ten miles of beaches on the Atlantic Ocean, Long Island Sound and Jamaica Bay, and has twenty parks, with a total area of 1,180 acres.

Queens ranks amongst the first fifteen cities in the United States in importance of manufacturing.

It is connected with Manhattan by three tubes under the East River and by the Queensboro Bridge. It is also connected with the Bronx by New York connecting Railroad Bridge over Hell Gate.

Queens Borough is made up of 64 smaller communities.

Building activities in Queens are progressing at a tremendous rate. During 1925 plans were filed for 30,139 new buildings, including private homes, private garages, apartment houses, public buildings, office buildings, stores, schools, churches and theatres. The dwellings included in these building activities provide for the housing of 35,041 families.

Queens has 235,000 homes wired for electric service, and on April 1, 1925, there were 53,076 passenger and 34,110 commercial automobiles registered in the borough. This is a great increase over 1923, when the number of registrations amounted to about 47,000.

Excess of Families Over Dwellings in New York City

(U. S. Census figures as of January 1, 1920)

The following table shows the number of families in the City of New York that have no separate dwelling for their own occupancy, but occupy a home in common with others.

Excess of Families Over Dwellings

	Dwell-ings.	Fam-ilies.	Num-ber.	Pct. Total Fam-ilies.
New York City	365,963	1,278,341	912,378	71.4

Richmond	18,274	23,781	5,507	23.2

The word "dwelling," as used in U. S. Census tables, means any building or structure in which one or more persons regularly sleep. It may not be a house in the usual sense of the term.

An entire apartment house constitutes but one dwelling.

The word "family," as used in U. S. Census tables, means a group of persons, whether related by blood or not, who live together as one household, usually sharing the same table.

Thus, one person living alone is counted as a family, and all the people in a hotel, boarding house or institution constitutes but one family.

East Broadway and Division St.
 Broadway, Manhattan, undoubtedly one of the longest avenues of trade in the world, is nothing more or less than a series of shopping centers joined by an almost continuous line of small retail establishments of every known character.

The extreme southern end of this avenue is devoted principally to office buildings familiarly known as "New York's skyscrapers," but even in this center of finance and international trade, there is an unbroken chain of retail establishments. From this point north, Broadway is a combination of retail and wholesale establishments of various sizes. In mentioning the principal retail shopping districts as briefly outlined here, we merely refer to the "heart" of a district. The national advertiser will find avenues of trade leading into each of these centers from all sides, varying in length according to the location and character of the residents in each neighborhood.

Of course, the most widely known retail section is the famous Fifth Ave. shopping district, which extends from 23d St. to 59th St.

A brief outline of New York City's retail sections would not be complete without reference to the East Side, where congestion causes retail conditions quite different from anything found elsewhere. The heart of this trading district is on East Broadway, Division St., the Bowery and neighboring streets such as Orchard, Essex, Grand, Henry, Madison and others. It is here that retail trade has reached beyond the limits of housing facilities and the famous East Side pushcart merchant has become a close rival to the shopkeeper.

The pushcart markets, however, extend all over the Greater City, not being confined to the lower East Side, where, however, they are thickest. A recent survey shows that there are 58 open air public markets in the city. Of these, 38 are in Manhattan, 2 in the Bronx and 18 in Brooklyn. Over 7,860 pushcart peddlers are licensed by the city government to do business in these markets. They sell articles of food and wearing apparel, and the average sale price is fifteen cents. The gross business for one year in the markets approximates $45,500,000.

The public markets are located in centers of population five times as intensive as in any other part of the city. They serve a total of more than 1,500,000 people. The markets supply a means of support for 31,000 dependents of whom 89 per cent are foreign born or of foreign parentage, 6 per cent are native born whites and 5 per cent are Negroes. At least two-thirds of all this number are either Jewish or Italian. Sixty-eight per cent of the vendors deal in fruits and vegetables with a retail value of approximately $35,000,000 annually; 4 per cent deal in other foods with an annual value of about $1,500,000; and 28 per cent retail merchandise worth about $9,000,000 per year. Seventy-two per cent of the vendors are Jewish, 22 per cent Italian, and the remaining 6 per cent is divided among German, Irish, Russian, Spanish and American. But 63 per cent are citizens.

Eleven per cent of all the fruits and vegetables supplying the city are retailed through the pushcarts. Some of these open air markets extend for a distance of 15 blocks. It is further reported that half the sales are on Saturday and a third on Thursday.

Principal Shopping Districts of Bronx

In the Borough of the Bronx there are many neighboring sections which afford wide distribution for nationally advertised products, especially in the food line.

The principal shopping centers of this borough are six in number, each of which presents exceptional marketing possibilities. In several instances the shopping centers are even larger than many retail sections of the average American city. These six shopping districts are located at Third Ave. and 139th St., Third Ave. at 149th St., Prospect Ave. at 160th St., Southern Boulevard at 163d St., Tremont Ave. at Prospect Ave. to Boston Post Road, University Ave. to Third Ave. on Fordham Road.

Principal Shopping Districts of Brooklyn

tion" represents the heart of the retail district, the principal avenues of trade are Fulton St., Flatbush Ave. and adjoining streets. Flatbush Ave. extends out to the Flatbush section and is the principal avenue of retail trade in this section. Kings Highway is also an important shopping avenue for Flatbush. In South Brooklyn the principal shopping district is on Fifth Ave. for many blocks. In the Williamsburg and Bushwick sections Broadway is the main avenue of retail trade. Stores and shops of every description from complete department stores to the smallest specialty shops are found along the highway of trade extending from the Williamsburg Bridge Plaza east for a distance of more than thirty blocks. Two particularly busy centers along this highway are at Broadway and Flushing Ave. and Broadway and Lexington Ave. Other important avenues of trade in these two sections are Ralph Ave., Reid Ave., Throop Ave., Tompkins Ave., and Nostrand Ave. which extend for quite a distance. Nostrand Ave. extends out to the Bedford section and together with Franklin Ave. forms the main retail section of this part of Brooklyn. In the Greenpoint section, Manhattan Ave. is the main channel of retail trade.

Principal Shopping Districts of Queens

As this borough has grown from the gradual uniting of popular neighborhood sections, it is natural that each of these districts should have a trading center such as Woodhaven, Richmond Hill, Jamaica, Whitestone, College Point, Flushing, Corona, Astoria, Long Island City and Ridgewood.

Jamaica Ave. is almost a continuous shopping street from Eldert's Lane in Woodhaven, through Woodhaven, Richmond Hill, Jamaica and beyond to Harvard Ave.

In Whitestone there are two sections—150th St. from Sixteenth Road to 11th Ave., 14th Ave. from 148th St. to 152d St.

In College Point the retail districts are at 122d St. from 15th Ave. to 26th Ave., and 15th Ave. from 118th St. to 125th St.

In Corona the shopping district is Jackson Ave. from 26th St. to 32d St.

In Astoria the main channel of retail trade is along Fulton Ave., Main St. and Astoria Ave. Long Island City, at Vernon Ave. from Borden Ave. to Mott Ave., and Jackson Ave. from Borden Ave. to Barn St.

Ridgewood, at Metropolitan Ave. from Newtown Creek to Collins Ave., Grand St. from Newtown Creek to Broad St.

Far Rockaway, at Rockaway Boulevard from 25th St. to Mott Ave., and Mott Ave. from Regina Boulevard to 20th St.

The possibilities of sales promotion in New York City are unrivalled. The manufacturer has represented in this single market every advantage for sales creation and every facility for the distribution of his product. The manufacturer need not go beyond the city limits to experiment with or encounter every known difficulty in the promotion of his goods.

Many manufacturers visualize New York City's retail possibilities as centering principally upon Manhattan Island. There are marketing possibilities in each section and the importance of newspaper circulation in each corner of New York City warrants no small amount of investigation.

The merchandising and promotion departments of leading newspapers can furnish in detail many facts and features of each borough which cannot be outlined to their full extent in this limited space.

Principal Shopping Districts of Richmond

In Richmond Borough (Staten Island) there are at least eight retail centers which are increasing in sales possibilities as rapidly as other boroughs of New York City. These centers are Port Richmond, West New Brighton, New Brighton, Tompkinsville, Stapleton, Rosebank, New Dorp and Tottenville. Each of these is a city or town in itself. In fact, the buying characteristics and sales possibilities of each community warrants individual study on the part of the distributor of merchandise.

The above mentioned shopping centers of New York City must not be considered the limits of distribution when planning a sales campaign in this great market. In addition to these centers of retail trade, the advertiser must take into consideration the hundreds of scattered or neighborhood districts. Careful analysis of the market on the part of national advertisers warrants close study of EDITOR & PUBLISHER'S Space Buyers' Chart, together with the accumulation of data from New York City newspapers.

Trading Area

The daily and weekly trading zones were secured after an investigation of the sales, delivery and mail order departments of three of the largest department stores in the city.

This investigation showed that one-third of the parcels mailed were delivered within 50 miles of New York, and slightly less than two-thirds were within 100 and 150 miles.

Seventy and one-half per cent of all mailed packages were in the first and second parcel post zones.

The daily zone boundary line extends on the east on Long Island to Long Beach, from which point it swings north through Rockville Center, Garden City, Westbury, Roslyn and Glen Cove. Northeast the furthestmost point is Stamford in Connecticut, including Greenwich. To the north the general description would be the whole of Westchester County, which includes, Ossining, Scarborough and Tarrytown on the east bank of the Hudson and River, Mount Kisco, Briarcliff, Mount Pleasant, Armonk and Pleasantville inland; on the west bank of the Hudson, Nyack and Piermont. To the northwest the daily zone includes Paterson, Passaic, Hackensack, Arcola, Ridgewood, Park Ridge and Pompton Lake, all in New Jersey.

To the west it reaches its furthestmost point at Morristown. Some of the large towns in this district are Newark, Orange, Rutherford, Montclair, Chatham and Bloomfield.

On the south, Perth Amboy and South Amboy, in New Jersey and Tottenville on Staten Island, New York, are the southern points within the daily trading area.

Within this daily zone nearly all the large retail stores in New York City have a daily free delivery system.

The weekly zone area extends to the east as far as West Hampton on the south side of Long Island, then swings north across the island and includes Manorville and Wading River. In Connecticut it extends to about halfway between Milford and New Haven, within this zone is Bridgeport, Milford, South Norwalk and Norwalk. This zone swings northwest including Danbury, Brookfield and Newton. The furthestmost point north is Chelsea on the Hudson River, which is about midway between Beacon and Poughkeepsie.

From this point on the east bank of the Hudson the weekly zone carries west. Included in this district is Newburgh, Cornwall, Highland Falls, West Point, Gardner Town, Walden and Middletown, which is in the general direction northwest from New York City.

The zone now swings southwest to Port Jervis, and is the furthest point in the weekly zone northwest of New York City. On the west the territory extends to a point beyond Hackettstown, this district includes Stillwater, Stanhope, Lebanon and Clinton, all in New Jersey.

On the Southwest the weekly zone extends as far as Trenton, and, swinging in a half circle and then east, we come to the Atlantic Coast, with the furthest point just south of Point Pleasant. This includes Sea Girt, Lake Como,

Ocean Grove, Asbury Park and Long Branch

Wholesalers

The wholesalers and jobbers of New York are purveyors to the entire nation as well as to the city and vicinity and New York is the largest distributing center in the United States, if not in the world.

WON AND KEPT SOLELY ON A RESULT BASIS THE "WANT" AD DEPARTMENT

ROCHESTER HERALD

FIRST IN ROCHESTER AND WESTERN NEW YORK

A community institution maintained by the independent action of thousands who have found that by its aid many of their wants may be satisfied at a minimum expenditure of time, trouble and money.

Well up on the list of leaders, the Democrat and Chronicle carried 3,228,537 lines of classified advertising during the first six months of 1926. This is only 2,000 lines less than the amount carried by the New York Times during the same period, and exceeds the classified advertising lineage of such papers as the San Francisco Examiner, Baltimore Sun, Cleveland Plain Dealer and Detroit Free Press.

This famous feature of the Democrat and Chronicle is unique in that its enormous amount of advertising is wholly non-solicited. Publishers of newspapers in other cities, with large and expensive classified organizations, have found it hard to believe that so great a lineage is possible without the employment of a trained force of solicitors. The voluntary classified patronage which this newspaper enjoys has, in fact, no parallel.

The accomplishments of the Democrat and Chronicle "Want" ads indicate a marvelously wide range of service, from the return of a lost article advertised only after the lapse of a year, to the sale of real estate in London, England. There is apparently no limit to their field of operation and the amazing results frequently reported are believed by many advertisers and advertising agencies to account in great measure for the superior value of the Democrat and Chronicle as a display medium.

The Syracuse Newspaper Situation

Syracuse, with a population of over 185,000, and with a population in its trading territory of 450,000, is known and recognized by national advertisers as one of the most responsive and most productive markets in the country.

The people of Syracuse and its tributary territory are served by one morning and two evening newspapers.

Where once Syracuse presented something of a problem to the advertising agency space buyer, by reason of the slight difference between each newspaper in circulation, it is now indeed simple to analyze in view of the changes in the Syracuse newspaper situation which have occurred during the past year.

The SYRACUSE EVENING JOURNAL has achieved a lead in total net paid circulation over each of the other Syracuse newspapers by such a wide margin that its superiority as a newspaper and as an advertising medium as well is entirely obvious.

The most recent circulation statement gives the SYRACUSE EVENING JOURNAL an average net paid circulation of 64,875 daily.

The JOURNAL leads each of the other Syracuse daily newspapers by several thousand daily circulation—a lead so great that its superiority is at once obvious.

The lead of the SYRACUSE EVENING JOURNAL in net paid daily circulation is due to but one fact, it is the best daily newspaper published in Syracuse, and its greater circulation expresses the positive preference for it by its readers over the other Syracuse newspapers.

Therefore, the greatest possible service the national advertiser can secure, the greatest sales power he can employ in Syracuse is the SYRACUSE EVENING JOURNAL.

It requires neither study, analysis nor discrimination to select the best advertising medium in Syracuse—it is the EVENING JOURNAL by a large margin—and with exceptional reader confidence to back up its largest circulation.

The SYRACUSE SUNDAY AMERICAN, with 78,000 Sunday for 6 months ending Sept. 30, 1926, has the largest circulation of any Syracuse Sunday newspaper.

Seething Figures

❑ Cold, unexplained circulation figures are the pitfalls of many schedules of advertising.

❑ Leadership is always expressed in Dominant Power rather than in mere numbers.

❑ If you were to study the recent semi-annual lineage reports of Editor and Publisher—taking the 6-day figures for all morning newspapers, it would be seen that the only papers that exceed THE UTICA PRESS in local lineage are the Chicago Tribune and the New York Times.

❑ To be ranked in such company means one thing—PRESTIGE AT HOME.

First in Ohio— Eighth in U. S.

The Akron Beacon Journal printed more advertising per six-day week during the first six months of 1926 than any other newspaper in Ohio. It printed more advertising in its six-day week than any other Ohio newspaper printed in its seven-day week, except the Cleveland Plain Dealer and the Columbus Dispatch.

In the United States there are 31 cities with a population greater than that of Akron, but the six-day evening newspaper in only seven of these carried more advertising than the Akron Beacon Journal.

Proof that Akronites think more of their Akron Beacon Journal than the people of other large cities think of their leading newspaper is found in the fact that the Akron Beacon Journal was 10th in local lineage and 11th in classified lineage among six-day evening newspapers in the entire United States while Akron is 32nd in population.

The gain in circulation of 8,935 net paid subscribers for the past year is another record just made by the Akron Beacon Journal. The circulation on October 1, 1925 was 47,326 while on October 1, 1926 it was 56,261.

Even greater importance than ordinarily is attached to every one of these 56,261 subscriptions by the fact that the factory workers in Akron receive an annual wage of $1,587.52, higher than in almost all of the larger cities of the United States.

Based on these facts and figures, the position of the Akron Beacon Journal and the Akron market justify the inclusion of the Akron Beacon Journal in your schedules.

An average of 530 packing cars are sent from Cincinnati daily loaded through to destination or to distant transfer points, insuring the delivery of less than carload shipments in practically the same time as straight carloads.

Improved paved highways radiate from Cincinnati in all directions and connect it with the most important communities in every section of the country.

Two National highways are—The Atlantic and Pacific, which links the two seaboard; and the Dixie Highway, extending from the Great Lakes Region to the Gulf of Mexico; intersect at Cincinnati. In addition nine State highways extend to points in Ohio and beyond; three into Kentucky and five into Indiana.

Twenty motor bus lines operating 75 busses utilize the major highways, carrying passengers to and from rural communities as well as the larger cities within a radius of 100 miles.

Principal Industries: Soap, clothing, machinery, machine tools, electric machines, woodworking, printing and publishing, play cards, office furniture and radio.

Manufactures are very numerous, varied and extensive, comprising about 8,100 establishments, employing 175,000 persons, and producing goods to the value of $600,000,000. Cincinnati is particularly interested in the pork trade of which it is one of the leading centers in the country. It has very extensive tobacco manufactures and is also the headquarters of numerous brokers and other dealers in these staples.

There are 90 major types of industry in Cincinnati besides a very large number of industrial plants, concerning which detailed statistics have not been published.

The leading industries (soap, metal products, meat packing, clothing manufacturing, printing and publishing) have a combined annual output in excess of $250,000,000. The wages paid by Cincinnati industries aggregate $100,000,000 annually.

The population of the Industrial District which includes one County in Ohio and two in Kentucky, is estimated at 750,000. The last Federal Census shows that out of 338,941 inhabitants over 10 years of age in Cincinnati, 185,308 were engaged in gainful occupations. Of this number, 134,925 were males and 50,383 females.

Of the total number gainfully employed, 61,596 males and 23,601 females were of native white parentage while 43,260 males and 16,483 females are of foreign and mixed parentage. The Census Report shows that 11,605 male and 5,926 female negroes were employed in Cincinnati in 1920.

A commodious and up-to-date hospital for children is now under construction.

The city of Cincinnati occupies an area of 72.2 square miles. The Industrial District includes the cities of Cincinnati, Norwood, St. Bernard, Lockland, Elmwood Place and Addyston, Ohio and the municipalities of Covington, Newport, Dayton, Ludlow and Latonia, Kentucky. The Industrial District embraces an area of 950 square miles.

Residential Features: Private houses predominate; many two-apartment houses, and large apartment buildings. But few workmen's tenements; sections of workmen's small houses of 3 and 4 rooms. Several suburbs, each having its own fine residential district, two having some of the finest houses in southern Ohio, and on two other blocks are residences costing as high as $1,500,000. The cities' natural trend in housing developments is towards the detached type of building consisting of from three to five rooms. At the present rate of building, approximately 2,500 families are being provided with homes each year.

Most of the workmen of the lower income group reside in the older sections of the city. During recent years however with the advent of the automobile, motor buses and better and more rapid types of urban transportation, there is tendency toward removal of industries from the older congested sections to the outlying suburbs. This tendency has been accompanied by an evacuation of labor from the older section into the suburbs. Skilled labor is scattered all over the city, being centralized in the vicinity of the various industrial colonies.

There is a distinct tendency toward home ownership in Cincinnati. Approximately 35% of the homes are self-owned. A large number of Building and Loan Associations, together with a number of Mortgage Companies, afford the working man an opportunity to secure at nominal interest rates. The Building and Loan Associations in Hamilton County have combined assets of $95,000,000.

Retail Shopping Section: Large central shopping district extending 9 blocks east and west and 7 blocks north and south. LOCATION

Cleveland is situated on the south shore of Lake Erie at the mouth of the Cuyahoga River. It is one of the largest inland ports. Ten miles of docks along the Cuyahoga River handle the immense tonnage of iron from the Great Lakes regions, 60 per cent of which comes through this port. There is 14 miles of lake front protected by a breakwater 6 miles in length. There are eight grain elevators and six ore docks.

The railroads, seven in number, are parts of or allied with the country's most important systems. They are Baltimore & Ohio, Nickel Plate, Wheeling & Lake Erie, New York Central, Pennsylvania, Erie, Big Four.

Each has its own terminal excepting the New York Central, Pennsylvania and Big Four, which together share the Union Depot. New Union Depot—now under construction to be completed in 1928, costing $60,000,000.

All the above named railroads are connected by means of the Cleveland Short Line R. R., a belt line making a circuit of 19 miles around the city, intersecting each railroad at or near a freight yard, making it just that much easier for the switching and transferring of freight from one line to the other. The New York Central system operates this and two other short lines in the Metropolitan district. There is another belt-line, the Newburgh and South Shore R. R.

Five interurban lines operate in all directions to points as distant as Toledo.

There are three bus lines to Akron, two to Youngstown, others to Ashtabula, Conneaut, Warren, and Toledo, Lorain and Sandusky, Elyria, Wooster, Pittsburgh, Berea and Lorain.

Eleven improved highways furnish easy access by motor to the surrounding sections.

Overnight vessel freight service to Detroit and Buffalo is given daily except during winter months by boats of the Detroit and Cleveland Navigation Co., and Cleveland & Buffalo Transit Co. The Great Lakes Transit Corp. also provides daily sailings to Chicago, Duluth and all intervening points on the Great Lakes. Two Canadian lines give frequent service.

SPECIAL INFORMATION

Cleveland's geographical location makes this city the meeting point of the coal from Ohio, Pennsylvania and West Virginia. The iron ore of the Great Lakes and the limestone quarries of Ohio tend to make this one of the greatest iron and steel markets in the world.

Cleveland outranks all American cities in the manufacture of nuts, bolts, wire, wire nails, malleable iron castings, steel forgings, vapor stoves, plumber supplies and electric carbon. It is the second city in America in variety of manufactures. It is second to New York in ready-to-wear clothing. There are 35 manufacturers in Garment Association. The value of clothing manufactured yearly is $50,000,000. Between five and six thousand are engaged in this industry.

In the county in which Cleveland is located there are 185,000 passenger automobiles registered in 1926; 1925 registration was 165,000. There are 28,000 trucks in 1926 registered, and 26,000 in 1925.

In 1925 permits were issued for the construction of 4,774 buildings and 12,459 additions to buildings already standing. The total estimated cost of these operations was $69,254,400.

There are 416.65 miles of street railway tracks in Cleveland, and the street railways carried 387,671,132 passengers in 1925.

The amount of freight received by rail and boat in 1925 was 25,749,242 net tons and freight shipped from the city during the same period amounted to 13,776,762 net tons.

The total assessed valuation on both real and personal property in 1925 was $2,168,243,440.

RESIDENTIAL FEATURES

The fashionable residential sections of Cleveland are on par with those of any city in the country. The older and best known sections in particular Euclid avenue is giving away to trade and the newer sections in East Cleveland, Shaker Heights, Lakewood, Bratenahl are well established. The workmen's homes one-third owned by the occupants are located near the industrial sections.

The workmen's homes are located for the most part in districts known as Brooklyn, South Side, West Side, Newburgh and Collinwood. There are several sections of the city now being developed for the building of four-room bungalows and seven-room houses; this is for the encouraging of home ownership among wage earners.

RETAIL SECTION

The principal shopping district extends from the Public Square which forms the heart of the business section and is at the junction of Superior St., Euclid Ave. and Ontario St. From the Public Square for about 20 blocks on Euclid Ave. is the main business thoroughfare. Prospect and Superior Aves which parallel Euclid on either side are fast developing into retail shopping districts second only to Euclid Ave. On these and intersecting streets will be found merchandise from all parts of the globe.

The A.B.C. defines this huge area as Oklahoma City's Market

An exhaustive survey of Oklahoma marketing practices within the last year has led to sweeping changes in advertising and selling methods in the great Oklahoma City market.

Following an analysis of this survey, the Audit Bureau of Circulations defines the Oklahoma City market as a unit having a population of 728,624.

The boundary of this area was not traced arbitrarily with a compass, but carefully determined by actual investigation.

Reproduced above is a map outlining this area—it's average radius is 68 miles—it includes not Oklahoma City alone, with its present population of 144,414, but in addition, three cities of more than 15,000, five of 10,000 to 15,000, eight of 5,000 to 10,000, thirty-seven of 1,000 to 5,000, and one hundred forty-five less than 1,000. Within this area 60 percent of Oklahoma's one billion dollar annual income is produced.

In an advertising and selling campaign this area is a unit; it constitutes the great Oklahoma City market. Selling this market at low cost is comparatively easy—the Oklahoman and Times thoroughly and alone cover this area at one cost.

ADAMS COUNTY PENNSYLVANIA

The First County in a Great State is an Ideal

For National Advertisers

A national church publication says: "Village America is distinct; Village America is that vast market lying between the cities and the farms; distinct in many ways, but chiefly in the dominance of conservative thought."

Gettysburg, county seat of Adams County, a place known through history to every school child, is really typical of Village America, as are a score of other towns in the same community covered exclusively by The Gettysburg Times.

It is ideal "tryout territory" because it can be covered at one cost. It has ONE DAILY newspaper—

The Gettysburg Times

An Associated Press Evening Paper

—which goes into every home in Gettysburg and three-fourths of all the homes in Adams County. (Adams County, by the way, ranks first in many things, but chiefly as the largest commercial apple and peach growing county in Pennsylvania. Its farms are unexcelled.)

YOU CAN COVER GETTYSBURG AND ADAMS COUNTY (and thereby cover a typical American community, in a small daily newspaper built on reader confidence and read from column to column)

When planning your Sales Campaign in- PHILADELPHIA-

With the BULLETIN ROUTE BOOKS of the Philadelphia and Camden territory systematically divided, the Sales Manager can now send his salesmen into the field to reach every wholesaler and retailer covering this great market—the third largest in the United States—in the shortest possible time.

The PHILADELPHIA and CAMDEN territory has been divided into 44 routes as shown by the map. On the back of the map are listed the streets and their position on the map. The names and addresses of the wholesale and retail stores are so routed that a salesman can go up and down one street and continue in this manner until he has covered the entire territory assigned to him completely without missing a single dealer in the route.

These route books cover practically every important trade. They are full of information, that every Sales and Advertising Manager should possess about the territory his salesmen are to cover. They give briefly the estimated population of each route, the type of people and their physical and buying characteristics.

Every advertiser should send for his free copy of the BULLETIN ROUTE BOOK covering his particular field.

To reach the families of Philadelphia who buy through the dealers listed in the Route Book, the BULLETIN should be your first choice. The BULLETIN is read in 535,096 homes in and around Philadelphia and Camden. No campaign in this great trading area that reaches a buying power of 3,000,000 can be complete without the BULLETIN.

In 1925 there were 112 Parochial Grade schools. Their combined enrollment was 7,125 pupils. There are 6 Parochial High Schools with an average daily attendance of 4,166 also 10 Catholic Charitable Institutions maintain schools with average daily attendance of 1,170.

Of collegiate institutions in or near Philadelphia, the best known are the following: University of Pennsylvania, 17,031; Girard College, 1,528; Temple University, 11,009; Swarthmore College, 563; Bryn Mawr College, 500; Haverford College, 250; Villa Nova College, resident students, 635. Among the famous special schools are Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia College of Pharmacy, The Woman's Medical College and Hahnemann Medical College; and there are other technical, industrial, theological and commercial schools, too numerous to mention.

The University of Pennsylvania is an object of great pride to all Philadelphians. It now stands among the first American colleges. Its departmental schools—of medicine, dentistry, engineering, finance, law and science—occupy several of the seventy-one University buildings.

LOCATION AND TRANSPORTATION

Philadelphia, the metropolis of Pennsylvania, is situated in the southeastern corner of the state, at the confluence of the Delaware and Schuylkill Rivers, about 60 miles from the sea. It occupies a central position on the North Atlantic seaboard, 90 miles by rail from New York, 96 from Baltimore and 132 from Washington. It occupies the peninsula about two miles in width between the two rivers, and extends westward and southward beyond the Schuylkill, including both shores of that stream. Philadelphia is connected with the rest of the country by three great trunk line systems of railroads—the Pennsylvania, Philadelphia and Reading and the Baltimore and Ohio, also the Lehigh Valley reaching Philadelphia over the Philadelphia and Reading. The two first named reach the center of the city by substantial viaducts. The Baltimore and Ohio has a fully equipped station on the east bank of the Schuylkill at Chestnut street, connected by tunnel and subway with the Reading Terminal. About one thousand trains a day enter and depart from these three terminals. At the freight terminals in different parts of the city millions of tons of freight are handled annually. Philadelphia has a Belt Line Railroad serving its active waterfront, by means of which freight from any railroad point in the country can be delivered direct in railroad cars to any steamship wharf in the city, and can be sent in cars direct from any wharf to any interior points without rehandling. Within the city there is a wonderful system of trackage, freight station and distributing points. There are seventy stations at which freight is received and delivered.

The terminal facilities of Philadelphia are second to none. There are 267 wharves, 41 railroad piers, 8 municipal piers and 12,000,000 square feet of storage space, practically all connected by the Belt Line R.R. The expensive system of transferring freight by lighters and car floats from one part of the harbor to another is not necessary in Philadelphia. A network of high speed electric lines connect suburban towns with Philadelphia and each other. Motor bus transportation has been highly developed, regular schedules are maintained. Connecting Philadelphia with all points of the world is a host of ship lines. Fifty-four now are serving this port. Forty of these are trans-Atlantic lines, while the rest go to South America, Asia, the South Seas, and Pacific Coast ports.

Philadelphia claims to hold first place in this country in the value of its manufacture of textiles, locomotives, steel ships, street cars, leather, storage batteries, cigars, dental instruments, talking machines, carpets, bone buttons, hosiery, saws and felt hats.

Philadelphia claims second rank in the production of worsted goods, sugar and molasses, fertilizers, foundry castings, petroleum products, chemicals, druggists' preparations, and machine-shop products.

With but one-sixtieth of the country's population, Philadelphia's manufacturing plants produce about one twenty-fifth of all American-made goods.

Of the 1,640 products listed in the latest census as manufactured in this country, this city makes 271, which shows that Philadelphia is not a specialist in a few lines. In other words, its eggs are not all in one basket, and it is not affected by seasonal conditions.

Philadelphia's production in 1920 was valued at $2,343,626,700, and in 1919 it was only $391,000,000 less.

Here are some of the stunning figures of Philadelphia production by the year—365,000,000 pounds of cotton and cotton waste; 10,000,000 saws; 45,000,000 yards of carpet; 6,669,300 hats, or more than 18,000 hats per day; 180,000,000 yards of cotton piece goods; 400,000,000 cigars; 250,000,000 pairs of hosiery; 83,862,700 false teeth; 60 per cent of the world's glazed kid.

Three-fifths of the street cars of the country are made in this city, every day six steam locomotives have been turned out here, and daily two and a half million paper boxes are made.

SPECIAL INFORMATION

Philadelphia is America's third largest market. It is also known as "The World's Workshop" and the "City of Homes." There are half a million separate dwellings in Philadelphia and suburbs. The city covers 129½ square miles and extends about 22 miles north and south, and from 6 to 10 east and west. 25% of America's Building and Loan Associations are in Philadelphia. 50% of the homes are owned by those living in them. Nearly 200,000 passenger autos are owned by the people. The payroll of the manufacturing plants exceeds $7,572,704 weekly. One of the greatest industries in Philadelphia is the textiles and allied products. The center of the textile industry is near Philadelphia, and in Philadelphia county alone there are 1,189 industries engaged in the manufacture of textiles and allied products. The leading products is yarn; hosiery and knit goods take the second position, while next in order come woolen, worsted and felt goods, women's and children's clothing, cotton goods, hats and caps, etc. Number of telephones, 803,480; number of houses wired for electricity, 800,000; number of gas meters (domestic and commercial), 460,060.

Building activities in 1924 amounted to $141,737,460, and it is estimated that this amount will be exceeded by the 1925 figures. The 8,379 Philadelphia establishments manufactured 211 of the 264 articles covered by the census of classifications, indicating the great diversity of its industrial activities. The Philadelphia retail shops rank very high, both in character of merchandise and point of service. It is estimated that Philadelphians spend $8,300 per minute over the counters of their retail stores.

In 1925 the City of Philadelphia spent $32,332,789 for educational facilities, including salaries and general expenditures. In 1926 this figure was exceeded by $2,723,653, the total outlay being, $35,116,442.

Philadelphia's financial institutions occupy a unique and important part in the industrial development of the city. Many of them are old established, and, in addition to being directed by industrial leaders, have during their long careers been identified in all their activities with the industries of the city.

The annual product of the factories in Philadelphia exceeds $1,998,000,000, employing more than 300,000 people. Philadelphia has 423,000 homes, only 11,607 of which are frames. It is distinctly a home town, and more homes are owned by the occupants than in any other city in the country. It is the shopping center for a tremendous population, living in the surrounding country.

Port of Philadelphia

Philadelphia is the second port of the United States. Modern piers, natural advantages and superior wharf and dock facilities, splendidly interlocked with the three railroad systems, give Philadelphia this proud position. Philadelphia has a water frontage of 34 miles, 20 miles on the Delaware and 14 on the Schuylkill. The Schuylkill River is unobstructed for the passage of large vessels to a point within two blocks of Market Street, and for some further distance for barges. At the lower end of the Schuylkill one of the largest Standard Oil Refineries is situated, and large shipments of oil for the foreign trade, as well as of grain, are made by way of the Schuylkill and Delaware. The Delaware River has a 35-foot channel, from 500 to 1,200 feet wide, running from the city to the sea. The Government pier, at the foot of Oregon Avenue, cost $15,000,000 and can accommodate 10 large ships at a time. The city owns 13 municipal piers and there are no port charges by either the city or state. The city has spent $25,000,000 for equipment guaranteeing the most economical and expeditious handling of all classes of freight, and has under construction at the present time two additional double-deck piers which, when completed will cost approximately $7,000,000. There are 267 docks used for the shipment of cargo. In addition to the city owned piers the list includes thirty-three for foreign trade, ten for coastwise trade, two for river and bay trade, twelve coal piers, four ore piers, three grain piers, six lumber piers, thirteen miscellaneous and industrial cargo piers, eleven railroad waterfront freight stations, and three United States Government piers.

The foreign and coastwise arrivals and clearance during the calendar year 1925, as recorded in the office of the Commissioners of Navigation, numbered 11,271, a gain of 355 vessels over the preceding year. The aggregate net tonnage of arrivals and clearances was 24,007,815.

The total value of imports was $210,322,047, a gain of $7,009,638 compared with 1924; export values also gained $13,259,370, the total being $105,376,882, showing a total gain in the value of commerce of the port of $20,869,053.

During 1924, increases were shown in the importation of bananas, bauxite, china clay, coffee, chrome ore, manganese ore, molasses and sugar. Bananas increased from 3,706,269 bunches to 4,821,827 bunches; bauxite from 36,278 tons to 47,664 tons; china clay from 134,314 tons to 172,749 tons; coffee from 54,644 bags to 109,307 bags; chrome ore from 80,216 tons to 83,444 tons; manganese ore from 74,158 tons to 93,594 tons; molasses from 21,771,392 gallons to 30,559,650 gallons; and sugar from 5,260,957 bags and 613,536 sacks to 5,965,328 bags and 1,037,611 sacks.

Preferred by National Advertisers

The PUBLIC LEDGER in Philadelphia

THE Public Ledger during 1925 carried in its columns a greater number of national advertising accounts and a greater volume of national advertising lineage than any other Philadelphia newspaper. The figures are: 1255 national display advertisers using the Public Ledger as against 859 using the second paper; 4,304,092 agate lines in the Public Ledger as against 3,461,836 lines in the second paper. Statistics to date forecast the same results for 1926.

This two-fold leadership indicates an established preference on the part of national advertisers for the Public Ledger—a preference based upon its demonstrated consumer and dealer influence in the important Philadelphia Metropolitan Trading Area—the country's third largest market.

The United States Department of Commerce, in its annual survey of exports by states, for 1925 places Pennsylvania third in the country. Pennsylvania's export shipments went through the port of Philadelphia alone, and there was a variety of commodities, including iron and steel, coal and coke, refined petroleum products, machinery and vehicles and grains.

The leading exports are grain, provisions, petroleum, tobacco, oil cake, lumber, tallow, hides, leather, shoes, cotton goods, machinery and coal.

RESIDENTIAL FEATURES

Philadelphia is a widespread city, without the usual cramped living conditions of other large cities. Its 23 parks are designed to afford breathing space in the more crowded business sections and places of beauty and recreation in the residential districts. The total area of these parks is 6,436 acres. The largest of the parks, Fairmont Park extends along the Schuylkill River from the extreme northwestern part of the city right down to the city's center at City Hall, the last stretch being a new parkway. With the city limits there are more than four hundred and twenty thousand individual dwellings, with over 40.6% owned by occupants.

Outside of the business districts and industrial sections, are to be found miles upon miles of neat, trim red-brick or stone dwellings, not flat and uninteresting in type, but laid out with a bit of ground and built with a certain artistry that is characteristic of the city.

Following are statistics on Philadelphia's housing accommodations:

Retail Shopping Section

City Hall, at the intersection of Broad Street, the main North and South Street and Market Street running East and West is the hub of Philadelphia.

Two railroads, the Pennsylvania and Reading Company, have their terminals at this hub. The city's main shopping, hotel and theatre district is located in this same section, so that either residents or visitors have ready access to these important phases of city life.

On Market Street are clustered the great department stores. Several of these stores have frontage on Chestnut Street, the next main street below Market. In addition to the railroads, subways, elevated and surface street car lines pour their tens of thousands into this shopping center, while the ferry boats plying the Delaware River deposit at the foot of Market and Chestnut Streets the flood of visitors from Southern New Jersey and the Atlantic Coast resorts.

The retail specialty shops are scattered along Chestnut and Walnut Streets, parallel streets just below Market and overflow into the various streets intersecting them.

West Philadelphia and North Philadelphia each have important shopping centers with department stores, specialty shops, hotels, theatres and restaurants on main thoroughfares.

Trading Area

Extending on the north to Easton, northeast to Trenton; south to Wilmington, Delaware; on the east to Atlantic City and on the west to Harrisburg and Lancaster, Philadelphia's trading territory is the second largest and most densely populated in the United States. Within 10 miles of Philadelphia's City Hall there is a population of 2,078,961, to which may be added 281,010 people in the 20-mile zone and 514,780 people in the 40-mile zone. Philadelphia in a metropolitan sense has a population in its trading area of 4,936,913.

The chain store field is dominated by three organizations with a total of approximately 2,400 stores. In the independent field, two co-operative buying associations have a membership of about 2,800 stores. To be fully efficient every merchandising campaign must take into consideration these factors and as they are naturally competitive, it is no small task to secure the support and co-operation of all.

Down Here* We Are All Space Buyers

Most of our residents down here in the Chattanooga part of the sunny Tennessee are space buyers—buying liberal tracts for home sites in the wide open spaces of our lovely mountains.

The city is surrounded by Mission Ridge with its 12 miles of government boulevard, Lookout Mountain and Signal Mountain, each 25 minutes from the city's humming industry, over wide concrete mountain highways—giving the people a choice among many lofty peaks for the building of homes.

Somehow in this lovely mountain country people don't go in much for apartments or fifty-foot lots. They get enough space to have a real home, flowers, and a garden if they want it.

All in all, the home life in our mountain suburbs down here is quite different from the picture you get in the North and East. And this is true regarding the circulation of the city's leading paper, The Chattanooga News.

Any agency man or space buyer, in selecting a list of papers, should get the picture of the life of the South and particularly in the Chattanooga section.

Chattanooga is a charming community, with home-in-the-evening characteristics that are almost old-fashioned. It wouldn't be sufficient for The Chattanooga News to have its standing contingent solely upon the fact that it leads the other paper in circulation, general advertising and almost every classification of advertising. That alone wouldn't be enough. The bigger thing is that The News is the Chattanooga paper with the authority—the paper that is believed in; that bespeaks the soul of the community.

GALVESTON-

A Rich Market

On November 6, 1926, Babson's Statistical Organization, the most influential and reputable firm of its kind in existence, announced that following a careful survey of the country, Galveston, Texas, has been chosen as the best city in the country at the present time and announces that Galveston presents the most fertile sales field in the United States and will repay extra sales pressure.

Mr. Babson states, "a study of these statistics indicates that Galveston will do about 20 per cent larger business this November than in November, 1925, and that Galveston, therefore, represents the most fertile field in the United States today, and is classed as the best business city in the country. Extra pressure in Galveston means increased sales with additional sales expense."

The GALVESTON NEWS (Morning and Sunday), and the GALVESTON TRIBUNE (Evening), the only daily newspapers published in Galveston, completely cover the rich and responsive Galveston field.

The advertising rate is 10 cents per line flat daily and covers advertising in both papers, as space is not sold in either paper separately. Where an advertiser uses the Sunday NEWS with the Evening TRIBUNE, instead of one of the weekday issues of the NEWS, the rate is 11 cents per line flat. Advertising may appear in both publications on the same day or in the evening of one day and the morning of the next.

The GALVESTON NEWS was established in 1842—84 years ago, —and the GALVESTON TRIBUNE was established in 1880—46 years ago.

The GALVESTON NEWS-TRIBUNE Merchandising and Promotion Department is at your service.

EXPRESS and EVENING NEWS
daily six months in 1926	74,851
Same period in 1925	68,655

The term, "San Antonio trade territory" is synonymous with EXPRESS territory and the EVENING NEWS is San Antonio's popular and most read afternoon paper.

*Over a Million and a Quarter Lines Sold
For First Nine Months of 1926*

Great as was the volume of advertising in the SAN ANTONIO EXPRESS and the SAN ANTONIO EVENING NEWS during the first nine months in 1925, the increase in the first nine months in 1926 shows how firmly these newspapers are fixed in the minds and judgments of advertisers, carrying a lineage far greater than any other newspapers in Texas.

The Record

First nine months in 1926...	14,320,061	lines
First nine months in 1925...	13,060,433	lines
Gain	1,259,628	lines

The fact that these two newspapers rigidly exclude from their columns advertising that is considered at all questionable, gives their readers confidence in advertisements that are printed.

NEWPORT NEWS, VA.

An independent community with a population of approximately 35,000 people, and a trading area population of over 100,000.

Newport News, in spite of its fame as an export and import city, has a diversity of industry,—manufacturing steel freight cars, heavy machinery of all kinds, ship-building, from small power boats to the greatest men-of-war, men's and women's wear, furniture, mattresses, phonographs, various leather products, fertilizers, and canned sea food, besides various other smaller industries giving employment to a large number of contented men and women.

Situated on the famous harbor of Hampton Roads, at the mouth of the James River, on the Tidewater Peninsula of Virginia, it does not depend upon any other city for its business or support.

This prosperous and responsive field is served only by the DAILY PRESS and EVENING TIMES-HERALD—they are the only daily newspapers published in Newport News, and the five surrounding counties.

The circulation of the DAILY PRESS is 4,761 daily and 8,274 Sunday, and the EVENING TIMES-HERALD 7,835 daily.

Their combined circulation is 12,596 daily, and the rate is 5c per agate line space is not sold in either paper separately. Advertisers have the choice of using both papers on the same day, or the evening paper of one day and the morning paper of the next. Both newspapers are members of the A. B. C.

The DAILY PRESS and TIMES-HERALD completely cover Newport News and the surrounding towns and cities of that section. They are not reached by any other newspapers, and the Norfolk and Richmond papers have little or no circulation in Newport News.

Newport News retail merchants may buy largely from Norfolk, Richmond and Baltimore jobbers and wholesalers, but the retailer and consumer demand is in Newport News, where the goods are sold, and a demand for your product in Newport News can only be created through advertising in the DAILY PRESS and TIMES-HERALD. Do not overlook Newport News because the retail merchants buy through outside jobbers—the demand exists in Newport News.

We will be glad to make a canvass or survey of any product among the retailers if you desire a line on Newport News distribution.

Tacoma

The Great Lumber Manufacturing City.

Tacoma is the second seaport of Puget Sound and one of the manufacturing centers of the Pacific Coast. Its factories number 579. In 1925 these factories employed 18,240 workers with an annual payroll of $26,605,857. Tacoma's production of fir doors, wood columns and veneer is one of the largest in the country. It has 21 factories that manufactured more than $4,000,000 worth of furniture last year. The Tacoma smelter is the largest on the West Coast. Flour mills annually export over 1,500,000 barrels. In lumber and allied industries, Tacoma carries the title, "Lumber Capital of America." Its mill capacity is over 5,000,000 feet every eight-hour shift or more than 1,500,000,000 feet per year. The value of the cut is estimated at $33,000,000.

On the Pacific Coast civic pride runs high and local newspapers are widely read. National advertising in other communities does not cover effectively this prosperous territory unless placed in local papers.

Tacoma's trading territory lies within the flourishing southwestern section of Washington state. It contains 14 cities and towns whose combined jobbers and retailers number 140 and 2,439 respectively. This district is prosperous and progressive and is linked with Tacoma not only by railroad connections, but with an intricate system of 485 miles of paved highway, with excellent bus service in every direction, coupled with suburban, train, steamer and ferry service.

The News Tribune for many years has maintained a dominant lead in the newspaper field of Tacoma and Southwest Washington. Its city circulation (suburban and country excluded) is greater than the total circulation of the other evening newspaper. As a recognition by Tacoma merchants of this complete coverage of Tacoma and Southwest Washington, the volume of The News Tribune in six evenings a week has been greater than the combined totals of the other Tacoma newspapers. In 1925 The six-evenings-a-week News Tribune carried a total of 9,327,388 agate lines of paid advertising. The total advertising volume of the second paper was 4,918,513 agate lines. During the continuous and rapid increase in prosperity and population of this district, The Tacoma News Tribune has kept pace. In 1925 it gained 538,754 agate lines of advertising over the preceding year, more than twice the gain of all the other Tacoma newspapers combined.

The News Tribune is the recognized advertising medium for Tacoma and Southwest Washington. National advertisers cannot cover this territory by using space in other cities. They recognized this fact by buying 1,694,096 agate lines in The News Tribune to sell their products in 1925.

DIVERSIFIED INDUSTRY—DAIRYING—AGRICULTURE—NATURAL RESOURCES

6 Reasons

Why You Should Use

Wisconsin Daily Newspapers

1. The gross income of the Wisconsin Farmer in 1925 was 390 million dollars. Monthly milk and cream checks made up about half of the amount. Hogs, potatoes, eggs and poultry, and small grains accounted for the balance. 1926 bids fair to equal 1925 in all respects.

2. Wisconsin's industries have a capital investment of 1 billion, 361 million dollars and rank eighth in the nation. Manufactured products annually total 1 billion, 846 million dollars, while an average of 317,000 people are employed in the state's 10,393 factories.

3. Natural resources contribute 10 million of dollars annually to Wisconsin's product score. There are 107 mines and quarries engaged in developing rich resource deposits, of which iron ore and granite are greatest. Wisconsin's production of these ranks 5th and 4th respectively among all of the states. Standing timber is valued in untold millions of dollars.

4. These 31 Regions of Wisconsin on the map above constitute terminals for economical distribution. Each region can be developed step by step with ease and rapidity. Distribution and advertising can go hand in hand. Logical, sane selling—and thoroughly read advertising in the daily newspaper of the region, win these markets.

5. The "home" newspaper of each one of these 31 important regions is necessary to the selling success of any manufacturer. Each newspaper blankets its own region as no other newspaper, magazine, or combination of newspapers or magazines can. The home newspaper brings your advertising message to not only 1 fireside out of 5 but of 5 out of 5 in its own region. One order and one check addressed to the Secretary covers the State!

6. In these 31 Wisconsin territories the national advertiser must use the paper of the region. The "national newspaper" has been wiped from the ranks in the last quarter century. Smaller city dailies and community newspapers have come into their own. In Wisconsin—particularly the "home town" daily newspaper has the preference!

A request addressed to H. H. Bliss, Secretary, Wisconsin Daily Newspaper League, Janesville, Wis., will bring complete information about this great advertising and merchandising unit of thirty-one live Wisconsin Dailies. Two hundred and fifty thousand total net paid circulation!

THE Greater Milwaukee market, with a population exceeding 1,000,000, is one of the richest and most dependable markets in America. Milwaukee is first city in diversity of industry; Wisconsin is first state in value of dairy products. This fortunate combination of circumstances is responsible for a consistent high level of buying power.

To cover many other markets of equal size, two, three and sometimes even four papers are needed. In the Greater Milwaukee market thorough coverage is made possible through the use of a single newspaper—The Milwaukee Journal.

Concentrate in Wisconsin's Preferred Newspaper

More than one-half million Wisconsin people read The Milwaukee Journal. No other publication or possible combination of publications—at any price—affords the coverage of The Milwaukee Journal in this market.

Furthermore, Milwaukee Journal circulation is 100 per cent solid. Premiums have never been used by The Journal to attract new readers or to retain old subscribers.

For advertisers in all lines of business, every advertising dollar invested in The Milwaukee Journal sells a maximum volume of goods at the lowest possible cost per sale.

The Milwaukee JOURNAL

The Milwaukee Evening Leader

A world leader in cooperating with advertisers

Two hundred and fifty Milwaukee grocers and eighty-seven Milwaukee druggists are on the staff—but not on the payroll.

They are supporters of the Milwaukee Leader and its advertisers.

They will give their windows for display and the Leader will make installation.

Fifty thousand circulation and nearly all in the city.

Its readers believe in the paper—thousands of them read no other Milwaukee newspaper—and they supply their wants from Leader advertisers.

Some of the largest food advertisers are using the Leader and they are getting results.

The Leader does not offer nor sell bulk circulation with thousands of readers looking for jobs, but rather a home delivered circulation among a people who are able to buy.

FIFTY YEARS OF LEADERSHIP

That's what the Journal-News means in the newspaper history of Racine and vicinity.

In these days of business casualties uninterrupted prestige for the space of two generations must necessarily have real merit back of it.

The October advertising totals tell the story of The Journal-News lead over the other Racine paper.

Total lineage for October, 1926

Journal-News	704,998 lines
Times-Call	469,518 lines

Journal-News lead for month of October	235,480 lines
--	---------------

Both the last Audit and the Sept. 30th Publishers' statement show a steady widening of the gap between the two Racine papers, and today the Journal-News' lead in circulation over The Racine Times-Call is greater than ever before.

These papers, with a combined circulation of over 32,000 copies daily, enter the homes of the 13,000 families in Halifax besides reaching into the suburban and rural districts of Nova Scotia.

Nearly 75% of the people are British descent, 97% being native born and 94% of whom read English. The people of Nova Scotia are honest, straight forward and thrifty. With the wealth that this territory produces, which they share in, they are potential buyers of nationally advertised products.

Advertising Advantages of The World's Greatest Newspaper

Sell Zone 7— $\frac{1}{2}$ of America

In several thousand towns of The Chicago Territory, The Chicago Tribune provides a coverage that has made enormous success for manufacturers using the Zone system of selling.

Sell 60% of the families in 1151 towns with Rotogravure

The Chicago Tribune rotogravure picture section and its rotogravure magazine section provide the finest pictorial selling at the lowest milline rate in America for standard size newspapers.

1st, of course, in circulation

The Chicago Tribune leads all other Chicago newspapers in city, in suburban and in total circulation. The daily circulation in city and suburbs alone is 600,000 — 120,000 more than the next Chicago newspaper.

Rates are low!

A quality product produced in quantity makes all Tribune rates among the lowest in America.

Carries largest lineage

The Tribune carries more national advertising, more want ad lineage and more local advertising than any other Chicago newspaper.

And in millines...

The Chicago Tribune prints more millines of advertising than any other publication on earth!

Automobiles

More automobile advertising is carried in The Sunday Tribune in ONE issue than in a WEEK'S issue of any other Chicago newspaper.

It has woman appeal

The Tribune leads all other Chicago newspapers in five out of the six principal classifications appealing to women—women's clothing, household utilities, toilet preparations, drug stores, and children's clothing.

For better homes

A great Home Builders' section, with pictures and articles on home building, financing and furnishing, provides ideal position for building materials advertising.

A tangible selling power awaits you here. Whether you use the Sunday million or the Daily $\frac{3}{4}$ million, whether black-and-white, rotogravure, or color rotogravure, there is no substitute for the world's greatest newspaper.

Pebeco Is Sold in Chicago Homes Through The Daily News

The universal concern for good health is the basis of the appeals made by manufacturers of dentifrices, whose products tend to prolong the life of teeth and thus promote good health. Since health is of primary importance to every one, it is a leading subject for discussion in the family councils.

Quite naturally the advertising of Pebeco dental cream—placed by the J. Walter Thompson Company—appears in The Daily News—the Chicago paper having the most weighty influence in the home. The Daily News is the only Chicago daily paper carrying this advertising.

Scott "Straight-Unit" Quadruple Floor Fed Press

"AFTER THE DEAD-LINE"

After the dead-line comes the roar of the presses turning out the thousands of papers which must, so soon, be on the streets and in the mails.

These are the hours when reliability of presses means success or failure to the pressmen—when every part of each unit in the pressroom must do its part without failure.

In service hour upon hour, day after day, for years, Scott "Multi-Unit" and "Straight-Unit" Presses have proven themselves to be always reliable—fast, strong, accurate, capable of producing high-grade printing in smaller spaces, in less time, and always without faltering.

Painless Cutting of Operating Expenses Now Will Protect Next Year's Profits

Horizontal Reduction of Costs Impossible for Most Newspapers, But Examination of Details Might Show Many Dollars Freely Spent in Prosperity Can Be Turned to Uses of Necessity

By ARTHUR ROBB

WHAT about 1927?

Sitting comfortably at the end of the year which brought advertising and circulation revenue in larger volume to newspapers than any in the experience of the business, newspaper owners, publishers and executives are finding it opportune to consider their operations for the immediate future. They achieved new record incomes in 1925 and topped them in 1926. Will they end 1927 in the same happy situation and complacent frame of mind? Today's thoughts may guarantee tomorrow's profits.

At the outset, let it be said that the business sky holds no clouds which menace newspapers. Advertising continues to demand editions of mammoth proportions, even though it is no longer leaping forward in gains of 10, 12 and 15 per cent per month. Circulations continue their steady unchecked upward course. Advertising specialists who are keenly sensitive to movements in the general field voice confident predictions that 1927 will pass the record of 1926. Automobile Row tells of large plans and newspaper advertising commitments for the January and February shows. Curtailment of activity in steel production centres is said to be mainly seasonal, with prospects of resumption on full normal schedules after the new year. Talk of a sudden and sharp recession in general business early in 1927 is dismissed by most economists as irresponsible.

The picture is rosy enough, and it is being studied intently and hopefully by the men who conduct daily newspapers. There is an undercurrent of feeling throughout the craft in big cities that the tide of advertising must some day reach flood, that the peak may be at hand, may come in the beginning of next year, or at the end of next year, and that when it comes, it must be followed by recession, by a period in which advertising will be of smaller volume than in recent months, and that revenues will be shortened accordingly.

Few of the men who hold these views and voice them confidentially can give categorical reasons for holding them. Much of the apprehension seems to be based on the well known newspaper "hunch," but it is present and is a psychological factor to be considered.

Probably much of the uneasiness arises when publishers, editors, and business department chiefs give a thought to the gigantic structures they have reared since the war and the comparatively thin margin that divides the red from the black on their books. General business conditions have to continue favorable if a good many publishers are not to be forced to live for a time on their surplus.

For, good times or bad, the newspaper has to keep the fires under the boiler, and a crew ready for whatever emergency the day's events may bring. When snow falls and people stop buying automobiles, Mr. Ford and his colleagues and competitors in Detroit "take inventory"; the motor trade papers report that "So-and-So has appreciably curtailed production," which in simple words means that the plants are manned by day and night watchmen. If business goes on the slow for a time, the railroads move the idle cars to sidings and put them in good order; the maintenance, yard, and train forces are laid off until they are needed. An idle ship eats up interest, but it doesn't require a full complement of officers, stokers, deck-hands and stewards.

The newspaper is compelled by nature to come to the scratch every morning or afternoon, no matter whether Main Street is jammed from stoop to curb torious editorial feature of information and entertainment value that his purse permitted. He has built up such a high standard of news service for city, state, nation and world intelligence that a potential competitor is faced with an insurmountable barrier before he starts. He has introduced new editorial and feature departments, which have attracted new groups of readers, who in turn have attracted new names and lines to the advertising columns. He has organized a loyal and capable staff to minister to these wants of the public.

Best Newspaper Story Ever Written

YEARS and years ago Jesse Lynch Williams wrote a short piece of fiction about a newspaper reporter named Billy Woods. titled "The Stolen Story." Few of this generation of newspaper workers have read it; old-timers call it the best newspaper story ever written.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER located Mr. Williams by wire in California this week and gained his permission to reprint this classic as our usual Christmas story. It will appear in these columns next week. Veteran newspaper men, we feel confident, will find in it real soul refreshment and every youth in American journalism will find fresh inspiration by meeting Billy Woods, who loved the game for the game's own sake.

with shoppers, or whether the soup-kitchen lines are a square long. It finds no respite in darkening the plant for six weeks—it publishes daily, or its ownership finds another place of employment.

It continues to buy newsprint and to pay high wages to a large force of men to turn the newsprint into newspaper. Its newsprint is contracted for at the beginning of the year; its labor is often on the right end of a three-year contract. Newsprint prices are sometimes reduced in midyear, but the young newspaper men of today have seen few cuts in the wages of union labor. The two main items of the publisher's expenditure are set almost as if fixed in Portland cement.

That fact has long been self-evident, but it becomes worrisome only after the Gloom dance on the business manager's desk and remind him that prosperity, like Caesar, is not immortal.

Ending one year with a profit of 10 per cent on the biggest income in his newspaper's history, a publisher is justified in viewing with concern any development that might cut into that gross income.

Out of every dollar taken in, he has poured 90 cents back into the paper. He has modernized the plant, increasing his capital outlay, but making it possible to produce quickly the paper that he has educated his readers and advertisers to demand. He has purchased every meri-

If a cut becomes necessary, where is the knife to be wielded to draw the least blood and do the least harm to the body?

Suppose advertising volume drops 10 per cent, making about that difference in the gross income. Say 10,000,000 agate lines were carried in one year and 9,000,000 the next—the mechanical difference is about 80,000 lines, or 40 pages a month, a page and one-third a day for a seven-day paper, a page and a half a day for the six-day paper. With editorial features uncurtailed, it means the difference between a 28-page and a 30-page average daily edition, permitting a possible saving of 6 per cent in newsprint, provided the contract had been sagaciously made. It is quite probable that the difference in operation would permit little if any reduction of the mechanical force. In the plant of a small daily paper facing a proportionate cut in revenue, the only possible retrenchment along this line is in paper consumption. As pointed out before, economy achieved by reduction of wages in unionized departments is almost unthinkable.

Where then, can the publisher make up the shrinkage in income? Shall he cut down his editorial program, eliminating departments and features to save their space and their cost? Not if there is any other exit! The editorial department has been the chopping block for a good many years whenever the accountants called for retrenchment, but the newspapers where the "iron ball" rolls frequently haven't topped their fields in 1925 and 1926. No matter what the critics say about the apathy of the public toward the press, its ethics, and its constitutional functions, newspaper men have demonstrated time and again in recent years that there is no such apathy toward news and entertainment features. The public is apparently quick to recognize and resent instability in the things it likes to read.

The publisher who drops an attractive syndicate feature, or a popular columnist, or a high-priced dramatic critic is likely to see him picked up, with a sizeable block of circulation by an alert competitor. At its best, a major operation in the editorial budget cannot cure the trouble and is extremely likely to bring aggravation.

What about the circulation department? Shall effort to get new readers be suspended pending better business? Banish the idea, unless this remedy is to be applied in the hope of assisting competition. Can the readers on R. F. D. routes be made to accept the old predate, arriving by the postal carrier a day late? It is doubtful, after they have had a year or two of late editions distributed to the doorstep by the publishers' own trucks. Cutting off a truck or doubling routes may save a few hundred dollars a month, but is also likely to cut off a few hundred hard-won subscribers who will be harder still to win back.

Reduce the advertising manager's budget?—yes, if the idea is again to transfer income en bloc to competition.

The "no" men seem to have all the better of the discussion so far. Newspaper income can shrink 10 per cent almost overnight, but newspaper outgo cannot be trimmed at equal speed without drawing life-blood.

Where then can the publisher who wants to put his house in order while the business sun is still bright turn with any hope of success? A horizontal cut of 10 per cent or anything like it being out of the question, how about some of the little, minor, unimportant leaks that exist in every organization? Keep everything that the publisher and his "cabinet" decide is essential to continued success, budget closely, and attack with a new broom the things that pass unnoticed when the goose and the bank balance hang high.

How about free publicity? Here is one of the major leaks of the business. It has no warrant for existence in flush or tight times, and it can be almost wholly extirpated if all of the publishers in each community set stern faces against it. No doubt the clever publicity man will always be able to get some of his employer's propaganda into free space on apparent news value or personal acquaintance, but clever press agents are probably not so numerous as they, their employers and the newspaper fraternity thinks. There is little cleverness in most of the puffs for automobiles, and downright dullness is

GENERAL MOTORS AD FUNDS TOP $20,000,000

Unconfirmed Report Places Total Near $30,000,000 for 1927 Campaigns of Corporation's 27 Divisions

Staggering sums will be invested by the various divisions of General Motors Corporation, Detroit, for advertising in 1927.

While there is an evident attempt on the part of officials to keep the appropriation secret, EDITOR & PUBLISHER was informed from an apparently reliable source that the total expenditure would amount to considerably more than $20,000,000.

Checking a report in New York that this was the approximate figure, a special correspondent in Detroit got in touch with W. G. Koether, secretary of the sales managers committee, of the company at the General Motors office. Mr. Koether declined to talk for publication. He referred inquiries to the New York office, where they were referred back to Detroit. There was a leak in the circle, however. That the advertising investments in the automobile field generally would smash all previous records next year has been expected in view of the war now being waged between various makes of low priced cars, particularly Chevrolet and Ford. Chevrolet is a General Motors car and, according to the reports, will alone account for $11,000,000 of the gigantic advertising appropriation. This account is handled by Campbell-Ewald, Detroit agency, and wires sent there by EDITOR & PUBLISHER Thursday afternoon were not answered by press time.

Frigidaire Company, of Davton, O., another General Motors subsidiary, will spend $5,000,000 in advertising in 1927, according to the same source. This electric refrigeration company had considerable success in the newspapers this year and is understood to be planning to increase the schedule from 1800 to 2000 papers, spending approximately $2,000,000 in this medium.

With these two divisions totalling a reported $16,000,000, the $20,000,000 appears too low an estimate, and, indeed, there are those who, claiming to quote officials of the corporation, place the figure at nearer $30,000,000. There are in all 27 divisions and the advertising is placed all over the world. Other big divisions than those named are Cadillac, Buick, Fisher, Champion, and the institutional copy which is placed through Barton, Durstine & Osborn, New York agency.

Arthur Brisbane, in his column "Today" this week stated that the advertising appropriations of two unnamed automobile companies in Detroit would total $20,000,000. He would not make the names of the firms public when questioned.

Estimating the General Motors appropriation at $25,000,000 this figure would represent five times the amount spent by the same corporation five years ago. The appropriation in 1922 was $5,000,000, then considered an amazing investment.

RADIO ENCROACHING

British Press Opposes Move to Give It News Rights

The British Postmaster-General is applying for the incorporation of the present British Broadcasting Company, which has an officially-granted monopoly of radio broadcasting throughout the British Isles. If Parliament passes this the Government will have full control of the Broadcasting Corporation.

The drafts of the proposed Royal Charter give the Postmaster-General wide powers, including permission to compile and prepare, print, publish, issue, circulate and distribute, gratis or otherwise, papers, magazines, books, circulars, etc., as may seem conducive to the objects of the Corporation and to collect news of and information relating to current events in any part of the world, and in any manner that maybe thought fit, and to establish and subscribe to news agencies.

The English press rightly regards this as a serious encroachment on its liberties, and already many Members of Parliament have prepared strenuous opposition to the proposals.

FINED FOR MISLEADING ADS

Sold "Strictly Fresh" Eggs at 53c. When Market Price Was 90c.

Two butter and egg concerns paid $50 fines in the Worcester, Mass., Central District Court, Dec. 2, on charges of falsely advertising a sale of fresh eggs. Both firms were alleged to have advertised their products as "strictly fresh" eggs.

Advertisements from the Worcester Telegram were introduced with the complaints. An official analyst testified that his examination of eggs bought by state inspectors at the sale showed that they were at least six weeks old, containing a quantity of ammonia. The fact that the "fresh" eggs were being advertised at 53 cents a dozen, while other stores were offering the same product for about 90 cents, led to the investigation by state inspectors.

DENVER POST STARTS MORNING PAPER

Bonfils Declares New Edition Will Have Full A. P. Service, Dropped by Rocky Mt. News After Scripps-Howard Purchase

(By Telegraph to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

DENVER, Col., Dec. 9.—F. G. Bonfils, president of the Denver Post Printing and Publishing Company, publishers of the Evening Post, announced here today he would start publication of a morning edition as soon as necessary plans are completed.

The new edition will be called the Denver Morning Post. The first number will not appear before Dec. 20, nor later than Jan. 1. It will be served by a complete Associated Press report.

Mr. Bonfils' announcement followed the recent purchase of the Rocky Mountain News and the Denver Times by Roy W. Howard, chairman of the board of the Scripps-Howard Newspapers, and the discontinuance of the A. P. service by these newspapers.

The following statement was issued to EDITOR & PUBLISHER:

"The Denver Morning Post will provide for Denver and the entire Rocky Mountain territory a morning newspaper of the same high quality as the Afternoon Post. It will insure to the people of this region an Associated Press morning newspaper. The new paper will have the complete Associated Press report, the Chicago Tribune and New York Times service, Universal Service and Consolidated Press Association, and it will cover the news with the same thoroughness as the Denver Post does in the afternoon.

"The policies of the Denver Morning Post will be exactly that of the Afternoon Post, to represent everyday fellow. The great mass of the people and battle unceasingly for all righteous and constructive movements that make for the welfare and happiness of the people. It will be an outspoken and vigorous opponent of every evil or wrong thing.

"The new morning paper will be delivered to subscribers for ten cents a week, six mornings a week. The Post already publishes a very large Sunday edition. Publication will begin as soon as necessary plans can be completed, but not before Dec. 20, nor later than Jan. 1.

"Mr. Bonfils determined to publish the Morning Post in response to a widespread demand from thousands of persons in the Rocky Mountain region that we supply them with an A. P. morning newspaper. For the past ten days, Denver has had no A. P. morning paper the announcement that the Morning Post would be published was greeted by a flood of subscriptions which poured in by thousands, and the paper will enter the field with the largest circulation of any newspaper ever issued in Denver."

NEWSPAPER LAWS

New York Legislature Passed 51 in One Year Affecting Press

Statute laws of the State of New York were increased by 851 acts of the 1926 Legislature and the secretary of the New York Press association, Jay W. Shaw of Elmira, after reading the whole 851 chapters, has learned that 51 of the new laws affect the newspaper and printing business.

The laws affecting the newspaper business are found under many heads, such as county laws, education laws, highway laws, public health laws, and insanity laws.

POLICE ADVERTISE

A novel three-inch single display advertisement appeared in Boston newspapers this week signed by the Commissioner of Police, Herbert A. Wilson. It was an announcement that the Police Department of the City of Boston would open new headquarters at a specified time in a building at 154 Berkeley Street. The new telephone number was also announced.

A. P. CALLED GREATEST COOPERATIVE EFFORT

News Service Formed to "Keep Pure the Channels of Public Information," Cooper Tells Insurance Presidents Group—Says It Has Contributed to Brotherhood of American Citizenship

KENT COOPER, general manager of the Associated Press, speaking before the twentieth anniversary convention of the Association of Life Insurance Presidents in New York, Thursday, described as "a romance of cooperative effort," the growth of the Associated Press from its beginnings to its present world-wide organization serving 1,200 newspapers.

Mr. Cooper's speech follows:

"Of necessity men seek to find suitable foundations upon which to build the business structures which are to be evidences of their ability and energy. They may do this solely as individuals. It may well be that the very nature of their endeavor requires that they 'go it alone.'

"When, however, several hundred individuals seek, as individuals, to find a foundation upon which to build an important function of their chosen work, such function being only one of the elements of that work, and all of them come into accord upon the principle that this individual function can best be fulfilled by cooperation, even cooperation with a competitor, common sense if not necessity will require cooperation.

"But if an idealism is injected into this cooperation the nature of the endeavor becomes animated with an ardor that cannot possibly have its counterpart in any other human activity. There is at once the energetic spirit of meeting a commercial necessity and meeting it with the strength that comes not only from cooperation but also from the fervor of making an idealism practical and effective. It is easy to imagine or to actually embark upon a plan that is idealistic. A good many men and groups of men have done that. But when in this world of strife an institution fulfills and continues to fulfill for 33 years its mission upon a cooperative and idealistic basis, then the story of its beginnings and its continued success should truly be entitled 'A Romance in Cooperation.'

"The Associated Press is just that. Because it has worked unostentatiously, the servant of the public only indirectly, namely, through its member newspapers, I find that in this year of grace there are many who do not know that the Associated Press not only is not organized for profit, but that by its charter it cannot make a profit. It is incorporated in New York State under the membership corporation act. Your own golf club could be incorporated under the same act. But instead of a golf course, the members of the Associated Press enjoy rights to a news service, and they pay their assessments therefor. The Associated Press has no other means of revenue.

"I thus begin with that elemental statement respecting the nature of the Associated Press because some may need assurance that the Associated Press has nothing to sell them. It is probably the largest institution in America today, if not in the world, outside of governments, that has nothing to sell.

"And it is the greatest cooperative effort in the world today. Its output is news. Its members dedicate to the Associated Press the ownership of the local news that they gather. Employees of the Associated Press not only exchange this news between the members but they intensify upon general news collection and prepare news reports of happenings to supplement what is available from the members themselves. Thus they cover the foreign fields.

"I want you to know about this cooperative effort, but I will be brief in explaining how it operates. The important thing is that you know of the spirit that brought it into being and that animates it in its work today.

"When we are asked 'What is The Associated Press?' we quote this paragraph:

"The Associated Press is a cooperative organization of persons representing more than 1,200 morning, evening and Sunday newspapers, having for its purpose the collection and distribution of the important news of the world for publication in its member newspapers.

"The Associated Press has its own leased wires, which form a network across the continent from Bangor, Me., to San Diego, Cal., and from Duluth, Minn., to New Orleans and Havana. The total mileage of this leased wire system is approximately: day wires 45,851 miles; night wires 65,139. The membership spreads from Alaska to Argentina and from the Philippines to Porto Rico. Each of the members engages to contribute the news of his immediate vicinage to the Associated Press.

"The number of words daily received and transmitted at each of the more important offices is over 75,000, or the equivalent of sixty columns of the average newspaper.

"There are no franchises."

"This term is frequently misused when 'membership' is referred to.

"A simple statement of what the Associated Press does would be to say that what a local newspaper reporter does for his paper in reporting local news, the Associated Press does for that paper and 1,200 other papers in reporting the news from all the rest of the world. For the Associated Press simply is a reporter of domestic and foreign news for publication in the newspapers which compose its membership. To collect this news it uses the telegraph, telephone, cable, wireless and mail. In its direct operations it expends $7,000,000 yearly derived by assessments levied upon its members while its members, who make their news available to it, expend many millions more—all for the collection of information for you. But the magnitude of the task is not so much what it does as what it must be prepared instantaneously to do at any point on the globe. Thus the work necessitates the watchfulness of approximately 80,000 individuals scattered throughout the world. Of course all of this large number do not daily contribute news to be incorporated into the Associated Press report. Important things do not happen daily within the territory assigned to each of these 80,000 individuals. They are there to report an event if it happens and nothing is reported unless it does happen.

"If that suffices as a statement of what the Associated Press is and what it does, the story of what brought it into being really ought to be told, for the telling of it should disclose that in the Associated Press indeed is there the culmination of an ideal, an ideal of no less importance to your welfare than the ideals which are the fundamentals of our form of government. To do his part in a constituent democracy a citizen must have information upon which he can base his thoughts and his actions. And if he is to think straight and act wisely he must have accurate news information untainted at its source by any selfish propaganda. The Associated Press came into being to do an honest service in the matter of furnishing news. It set that as its ideal.

"Fortunately its work has contributed to effecting the brotherhood of American citizenship. The railroads properly are given credit for cementing the scattered people of this vast domain into complementary activity. That activity, however, is commercial. The railroads are the great modern caravans of trade. They make for the material enrichment of the country. But of what avail would even the railroads be toward making this a cohesive people if there were not the press association to exchange news throughout the land so that everyone may know instantaneously of the activities of his fellow man; of the doings of government and all the multifarious interests that exert themselves in our daily life as a people? Man must think before he can trade and before he can think he must have food for thought—he must know what is going on in the thousand and one localities where he trades or hopes to trade. The Associated Press functions to furnish this information to its member newspapers, not only the domestic happenings, but the foreign. And from the newspapers you get this story of what the world is doing.

"An important occurrence in New Orleans, for example, at this moment will be reported in your newspaper today and read by you at the same moment millions of your fellow citizens may read exactly the same wording that you read. From Bellingham to Key West and from Bangor to San Diego the same story is simultaneously read. It may happen that not even the people of New Orleans, where the event occurred, will read it before you do. Thus the work of the Associated Press focuses the attention and synchronizes the reading and the thoughts of millions of Americans. Through 132,000 miles of telegraph and telephone wire it carries the pulse beat of the nation to its four corners as promptly as the arteries carry the human pulse beat through the human body. This prompt reporting and transmission of the story of humanity vitalizes a hundred million people into homogeneity if anything does. It was Mark Twain who said: There are just two things that spread light to the four corners of the world—the sun in the heavens and the Associated Press down here!"

"Here then, you say, is a mighty engine of publicity indeed! One may well pause to think of what one man, if in control, could do to convert—even pervert—the thoughts of millions. By coloring facts, by a twist here and a turn there, this one man's will might be done! And if he did not do his work too crudely a nation might be a tool in his hands. Again I say this might be IF one man were in control.

"But one man is not in control and if an adventure in prophecy is warranted one man never will be in control. For it was to prevent one man being in control that the Associated Press of today there was a time when one or two men were in control. It was to end that control that the Associated Press of today came forth. This revolt against tyranny, actual or potential, has been aptly termed by Melville E. Stone as 'the revolution

MAIL COPY, NOT CABLE MATTER, TELLS REAL CONDITIONS IN FAR EAST

So Declares Japan Advertiser Executive, Who Cites Necessity of Thorough "Translation" of News Events—Bare Facts Meaningless

"MAIL copy instead of cable messages contains the real news of the Far East, and until the average American newspaper editor realizes this fact and acts upon it there will never be anything like a genuine understanding of Japan and China on the part of the American reading public," Frank H. Hedges, retiring managing editor of the Japan Advertiser, American daily newspaper of Tokio, told a correspondent of EDITOR & PUBLISHER on the eve of his departure recently from Japan. Mr. Hedges also emphasized the fact there is an unquestioned increase of interest in the Far East by the American press, as evidenced by the multiplication of newspaper correspondents stationed in Tokio and Peking and of editors and correspondents who are making short trips of investigation to the Orient.

The speaker's conclusions have been reached after a number of years of actual experience in both China and Japan, not only as editor of a Tokio paper but as correspondent first for the Philadelphia Public Ledger and later the Christian Science Monitor. "My ideas on this subject have been slowly crystallizing as I have watched the situation and studied it," he said.

In order to free himself from executive and office work, Mr. Hedges has resigned the managing editorship of the Japan Advertiser to become contributing editor. He hopes thus to be able to devote his entire time to original writing, study and research in his chosen field, the Far East. He is leaving Japan for a year's trip around the world, a large part of which will be spent in India and the other countries of Asia, and during which he will contribute to several American papers as well as the Japan Advertiser.

"It doesn't make a great deal of difference under ordinary circumstances who is Premier of Japan and certainly not who is President of what we choose to call 'China' so far as the American newspaper reader is concerned," Mr. Hedges told EDITOR & PUBLISHER. "Yet that is what is cabled home and published in the papers. It should be, of course, but it is little more than a matter of record, for such an item of news is absolutely meaningless to most Americans. Let the press associations cable such stories; that is their business. The special correspondent should devote himself to an intensive study of whichever country he may be in and then 'translate' what he finds so that it will be understood in the United States.

"I use the word 'translate' because that is what has to be done in most cases. 'Interpret' carries with it the idea of too much editorial and personal comment. Japan is going to hold its first general election under the new universal manhood suffrage law next May unless some utterly unforeseen development occurs. That statement doesn't mean much, and the tabulated results of the election will not mean much, to the American newspaper reader. But there is a real story in all this, one of great significance and having a genuine interest if properly written.

"The fall of the Government is to be caused by the so-called Bokuretsu Case. A more curious or interesting political development than this case would be hard to find in any country. Because a judge of the court photographed a prisoner under examination, 13,000,000 people will go to the polls in May and a Government may be turned out of power. There's your story; but I haven't told it here. It would take, first, an intimate knowledge not so much of Japanese politics as of Japanese psychology and the position of the Imperial Family to tell the story, and then it would take at least 1,000 to 2,000 words.

"Who is going to cable 2,000 words, even at the 'reduced' press rate of 18 cents across the Pacific? And yet, if some foolish correspondent did so, I do not doubt that the story would receive a big play. But when he sits down and writes that story as it should be written and then puts it in the mailbag in ample time, it is more than an even bet that it will be thrown into the wastebasket simply because it came by mail instead of cable. Does the fault lie primarily with the correspondent?

"The Bokuretsu Case is a much better story than the bare election results, and the same is true of most of the other news from the Far East. It is the broader movements, such as the change in the status of women, the growth of labor, the evolution of political systems, rather than day-by-day politics that constitute the true news from Japan and China, and these must of necessity be dealt with in mail and not in cable copy. A correspondent who remains in the Far East soon comes to realize this; the educative process is needed in the news and editorial rooms in America."

That there is a tendency in this direction appears evident to Mr. Hedges, although he says it is still but in its infancy. It is, he believes, part of the larger tendency of the American press as a whole to get away from cheap sensationalism and to make a revaluation of news.

"Some few, but very few, American papers," he says, "are willing to judge a mail story on its own intrinsic merits and to edit the paper for its readers instead of for other newspaper men. Those papers which have had the foresight and the courage to try out this policy have found that it paid."

A more prominent factor in the increase of news from the Far East is seen by him in the presence of a fairly large body of American correspondents in Far Eastern capitals. "When I first came out," he says, "the Associated Press had a full-time man in Tokio and another in Peking, but they were the only two full-time American correspondents in Japan and China. Today in Tokio each of the three great American press associations maintains a bureau, as do several of the newspapers which syndicate their services, while there is scarcely an American paper of national standing which does not have a part-time man in the Japanese capital. The situation in Peking has also progressed.

"In addition to this, there has been a steady stream of 'newspaper pilgrims' since the Washington Conference. High newspaper and press association executives have been out here, while a dozen or more influential newspapers have sent men out for trips of several months. These men have not been fly-by-night reporters by any means, but often have been the star men on their papers, the heads of London bureaus, foreign editorial chiefs, Washington correspondents. One paper, the New York Times, has sent both its foreign editorial chief and the head of its Washington bureau to the Far East since the great earthquake. At the certain risk of omissions through lack of notes, men from the following papers have visited Japan, China or the Philippines during the past 18 months: Chicago Daily News, Chicago Tribune, the Hearst newspapers, the Baltimore Sun, New York Herald Tribune, New York Times, Kansas City Star, Detroit News, the Chicago Evening Post, the Scripps-Howard newspapers, the Washington Star, the Christian Science Monitor and the Nation."

LOSES LIBEL SUIT

London Labor Weekly Must Pay £1,100 Damages for Mine Story

(Special to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

LONDON, Nov. 29.—Comments by the Workers' Weekly, a London Labor weekly paper, on a coal-mine disaster wherein six men met their deaths, resulted in an action for libel at Manchester Assizes, and the plaintiffs, the proprietors of the colliery, with the general manager and the pit manager, were awarded £1,100 damages, being £100 for the company and £500 each for the two executive heads.

The Workers' Weekly alleged that the disaster was due to the negligence of the company. The paper's correspondent responsible for the report said he based his comments on reports he received as local secretary of the British Miners' Federation. Thomas Hines, proprietor of the paper, asserted his conviction that the report was justified.

NEW RUTGERS JOURNALISM SCHOOL OCCUPIES NEW QUARTERS

THE above picture shows a group of students of the recently founded Department of Journalism at Rutgers University, New Brunswick, N. J. It was taken in their new quarters in the library Building of the University, which have been fitted up as a newspaper office. The room contains desks for the student reporters (shown in the foreground), a copy desk for the student editors (in the background), a printing telegraph machine over which the Associated Press news service is received (background), and a substantial collection of reference books of the kind commonly used by newspapers.

All of the professional work of the Department of Journalism is practical, the students receiving experience in reporting and editing actual news, preparing special articles and editorials, and performing assigned duties in every branch of the profession for which they are preparing. Their cultural education is also provided for in the University, a full four years' course having just been framed to focus their studies on branches which are especially useful to newspaper workers.

The Department adheres to a set of principles upon which all its functioning is based. These principles are:

Direct co-operation with the newspaper profession, as represented by the New Jersey Press Association.

Teachers are required to have a minimum of five years' varied experience on the staff of a newspaper of high standing.

Sound preparation of the students in general education is focussed on the needs of newspaper work.

All professional instruction is thoroughly practical and in accordance with the best methods followed at present by leading newspapers.

Meritorious graduates are to be employed in legitimate newspaper work promptly after graduation, by means of co-operation with the New Jersey Press Association.

Character standards for the students are insisted upon.

A committee of the New Jersey Press Association, the chairman of which is Rudolph E. Lent, general manager of the Passaic Daily News, co-operates actively in the work of the Department, which was founded in 1925, on the initiative of the Association. The instructors are Professor Allen Sinclair Will and Assistant Professor Hubert R. Ede.

PUBLISHERS WIN SURPRISE POSTAL VICTORY

Moses Committee Will Report in Favor of 1920 Rates on Second Class in First Two Zones—A.N.P.A. Nears Agreement with Railroads on Newsdealers' Bundles

By BART CAMPBELL

(Washington Correspondent, EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—A compromise plan that may furnish the basis for a substantial reduction in second class rates at this session of Congress was proposed this week by Senator Moses, chairman of the joint congressional postal committee.

One of the high spots of the Moses plan is a restoration of 1920 rates in the first and second zones, with a sliding scale in the remaining six zones.

"A long step in the right direction," Senator McKellar stated to EDITOR & PUBLISHER.

McKellar, a committee member, introduced a bill at the last session of Congress providing for a restoration of 1920 rates all along the line.

The Moses plan has apparently found favor among all of those interested except the Post Office Department. Postmaster General New and his advisers are insisting the present rates should be continued two years longer.

The Moses plan may prove acceptable to Congress. Some of those interested suggest adoption of the plan might be the easiest way out of the existing rate jam.

The Moses plan was put forward after representatives of the newspaper publishing interests held a series of conferences. Elisha Hanson, speaking for the A. N. P. A., informed EDITOR & PUBLISHER a statement covering the situation would be issued next week.

John Stewart Bryan, president of the A. N. P. A.; J. D. Barnum, chairman of its postal committee; Lincoln B. Palmer, its manager, and E. H. Baker, head of the Cleveland Plain Dealer, were present at several conferences at which the whole postal situation was gone into. These conferences were held here this week.

Hanson announced that following one conference, at which H. L. Fairfield, manager of the mail, baggage and express traffic, Illinois Central System, was present, it was agreed that a solution of the "kick-off" system would be reached.

"Kick-off" is a term used to describe delivery of parcel or bundle from a moving train at a non-stop point.

At present newspaper bundle deliveries are generally not made at those points where a train does not stop. This is particularly true of the metropolitan dailies.

With comparatively few exceptions, newspapers have no agreement with railroads for the "kick-off," either as to service or rates. Under the arrangement just made tentatively with Fairfield by A. N. P. A. representatives, which is subject to approval by the eastern lines in the present instance, newspapers would be given full advantage of non-stop delivery privileges.

"Our agreement with Fairfield means a fifty-to-seventy-five per cent saving in baggage rates as against mail costs," Hanson told EDITOR & PUBLISHER. "A fifteen per cent saving to us on mail tonnage alone."

Both Barnum and Fairfield are members of the postal service committee of the United States Chamber of Commerce. This committee made public this week a lengthy report on postal rate legislation, in which this thought was emphasized:

"There is abundant evidence that the present postal rates have retarded the natural growth of many branches of business. It has been admitted that these rates were established without adequate study and not upon a scientific basis following the accepted principles of rate making."

It was stipulated that Barnum's approval of the report "is subject to satisfactory conclusion of an agreement between the railroads and the newspaper publishers for the handling of newsdealers' bundles."

Fairfield left here for Buffalo after informing representatives of the A. N. P. A. he would there meet with spokesmen for all railroad lines east of the Mississippi for the purpose of arranging a "satisfactory conclusion" of the "kick-off" dispute.

Besides Barnum and Fairfield the other members of the postal service committee of the United States Chamber of Commerce are Herman Roe, president of the National Editorial Association; R. N. Fellows, advertising sales manager, Addressograph Co., Chicago; Lucius Teter, president Chicago Trust Co., Chicago; A. J. Baldwin, vice-president, McGraw-Hill Co., New York City; Col. Robert Ewing, publisher, New Orleans States, New Orleans; David Burpee, president, W. Atlee Burpee Co., Philadelphia; M. O. Chance, vice-president, Griffith Coal Corporation, Washington, D. C.; Frederick J. Cross, vice-president, Robeson-Rochester Corporation, Rochester, N. Y.; Harold H. Emmons, Clark, Emmons, Bryant & Klein, Detroit; Henry S. Lyons, secretary and director, New England Fuel & Transportation Co., Boston; S. C. Mead, secretary, Merchants Association, New York City; R. J. Raney, vice-president, Montgomery Ward & Co., Chicago, and Sylvester L. Weaver, president, Weaver-Henry Mfg. Co., Los Angeles.

The committee's report, as it refers to second-class mail, follows:

"The matter in second class is limited to publications sent periodically to bona fide subscribers. From the rate standpoint it is now divided into four groups:

"1. Free in county, that is, publications delivered free by the Post Office Department in the county of publication.

"2. Religious, scientific, fraternal, etc., publications not conducted for private profit, on which a flat rate of one and one half cents per pound applies regardless of distance or advertising content.

"3. Other publications containing five per cent or less advertising on which a flat rate of one and one half cents per pound applies.

"4. All other publications which take a combination rate of one and one half cents per pound on the reading matter and a zone rate on the advertising matter which increases with the distance.

"Unquestionably the rates on the first three groups of publications have no direct relationship to postal costs. The same applies to a portion of the fourth group or zone rate publications which, due to their small advertising content or small weight per piece, pay only a small portion of such cost. However, the remainder of the publications in the zone rate group, which on account of their size and large circulation constitute a considerable part of the total volume, more than pay their own way and would continue to do so at the rates which were in effect during the fiscal year 1920 prior to the last two increases provided for by the War Revenue Act of 1917.

"From the above it is clear that a considerable portion of second class matter is carried free or at a low rate in the public interest and welfare. This committee is not prepared to recommend that this portion be brought to a basis of paying its own way, as this would seriously interfere with many valuable publications and prevent the movement of mail matter which, in the public interest, should be permitted to move even at less than cost of service. It is believed, however, that a minimum piece rate basis could be worked out which would not be subject to such objections.

"The fact that a considerable portion of zone rate second class matter is now paying its way and would continue to do so at 1920 rates is frequently lost sight of due to the deficit caused by the other groups of second class above mentioned. Since the increases of rates on zone matter made in 1920 and 1921, this portion, which is profitable to the Post Office Department, has decreased materially due to the diversion of part of this business to other types of distribution than the mail, such as baggage, bus and freight transportation, increased newsstand sales, and personal delivery.

"The records of the Post Office Department show an actual decrease in this type of matter, instead of a normal rate of increase corresponding to the growth of the publication business and other classes of mail. This effected chiefly the publications having a large advertising content as is shown by the fact that between 1920 and 1925 the advertising portion of zone rate matter handled in the mails decreased from 599,000,000 pounds to 512,000,000 pounds or 14.54%. This indicates the un-economic character of the 1920 and 1921 increases. If proper allocations were made of the policy costs which have been mentioned above, reductions in rate could be effected which would no doubt bring back to the postal service a considerable amount of profitable second class matter now being distributed by other means than the mails.

"During the hearings before the Congressional Joint Sub-Committee on Postal Rates the newspaper publishers requested the establishment of a bundle rate by the Post Office Department, comparable with that given by the railroads. During the discussions of the subject by this committee, however, an apparent agreement has been reached between the railroads and the newspapers for a modified baggage service which should meet the situation.

"Publications mailed by other than the publishers are covered by a special rate known as transient second class. This was formerly one cent for each 4 ounces but was increased in 1925 to two cents for each 2 ounces up to 8 ounces, while above 8 ounces parcel post rates apply. The reports of the Post Office Department show a decrease of more than 37 per cent in volume in this business and the change in this rate brought more complaint from individual mailers than any other of the recent rate changes. Both the majority and minority bills introduced at the last session of Congress called for a flat rate of one cent for each 2 ounces without limit as to weight. This change appears to be in the public interest."

The Moses plan was a complete surprise to representatives of the newspaper publishing interests here. Moses refused to furnish them with a draft of the plan when they learned of it although he sent each member of his committee a copy of its full text in the guise of a tentative confidential report. He invited each of his colleagues to sign it. He then called a meeting of his committee for Tuesday, Dec. 14. He hopes to have it reported favorable to the Senate by an unanimous vote. EDITOR & PUBLISHER was informed reliably that the committee may accept the plan as a practical basis for an early compromise. Some material changes are however likely to be suggested although in some quarters the plan is regarded as a satisfactory approach to demands of the newspaper publishing interests and as virtual recognition of the principle of those demands and of the McKellar bill—restoration of the 1920 rates.

In the meanwhile all aspects of the plan are being studied carefully by the representatives of newspaper publishing interests here.

MOSES MAIL RATES RELIEVE PUBLISHERS' IN WIDELY VARIANT DEGREES

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 9.—U. S. Senator George H. Moses, of New Hampshire, is planning to submit next week to the Senate a solution of the present second-class postal rate problem. Moses is chairman of the Special Joint Congressional Postal Committee.

It is understood that Sen. Moses will endeavor to have his special committee endorse a modified scale of rates to apply on second class mail matter.

He has heretofore indicated that he would not recommend the 1920 rates that have been sought by the publishers because the reductions in postal revenues would be too drastic.

By taking the mailings of five representative daily newspapers covering a three-months period, it is found that their postage costs would be as follows:

	Present Rates	1920 Rates	Proposed Rates
Publication No. 1.....	$9,827.84	$7,987.01	$8,117.14
Publication No. 2.....	9,514.20	8,037.17	8,046.60
Publication No. 3.....	2,708.61	2,219.40	2,241.93
Publication No. 4.....	2,128.67	1,868.95	1,939.39
Publication No. 5.....	8,535.95	6,570.63	6,423.81

It is evident that a change from a rate that is based on the percentage of advertising matter for each zone to a fixed rate for each zone will have a different effect on each publication depending upon the average advertising content and the extent of its distribution in the distant zones.

The basis that Senator Moses has in mind will give the 1920 basis to all papers in the first two zones with a little higher basis in the other zones and will therefore produce a lesser reduction on nationally distributed publications than would be brought about by the 1920 rates. Newspapers stand to benefit, it is obvious, if the Moses rates are enacted.

STRONG RADIO COMMITTEE PICKS FLAW IN BILLS TO ESTABLISH CONTROL

Objects to Clause Demanding Labelling of Broadcast Advertising—Would Give Stations Right to Reject Air "Ads"

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6.—The National Radio Coordinating Committee, of which Walter A. Strong, publisher of the Chicago Daily News, and representative of the Radio Committee of the American Newspaper Publishers Association, is chairman, has struck hard at the provision of the pending Senate bill that all matter broadcast by any radio station for which money is paid must be announced as "paid for" or "furnished by," and there shall be no discrimination as to charges, terms, or service to advertisers.

Devoting a special paragraph, under the heading, "Discrimination as to rates and service to advertisers," to the advertising phase of the proposed radio legislation, the committee states that while it "does not deny the right of the Government, under existing governmental bodies, or under existing laws, or under the terms of the bill, to control rates, there seems to be implied, especially in the words, 'terms or service to advertisers,' the compulsion on the part of the broadcaster to accept advertising from any one who may demand it if the word, 'discrimination,' is technically used."

"It is the opinion of this committee," the statement continues, "that a broadcaster should not be deprived of his right to refuse the advertising or to refuse to render a service at his discretion or reestablish rates commensurate with the time and character of a program in exactly the same manner as a newspaper, for reasons of dishonesty or false statement may refuse to accept advertising copy for publication, or in this case for any other good reason arising out of the peculiar situation surrounding radio broadcasting, and it is suggested, therefore, that lines 10 and 11 (of the Senate bill) be eliminated, or at least so worded as to prevent the imposition of this principle upon the broadcaster."

The statement relating to advertising was incorporated in an exhaustive review of the Senate and House bills, better known respectively as the Dill and White measures, which are still deadlocked in conference, which the committee issued shortly before the reassembling of Congress.

A number of extremely important recommendations were made by the committee which were signed by Paul B. Klugh, executive chairman, National Association of Broadcasters; Arthur T. Haugh, president, Radio Manufacturers' Association; R. W. De Mott, president, Radio Magazine Publishers' Association; Louis B. F. Raycroft, chairman radio section, National Electrical Manufacturers' Association; Charles H. Stewart, vice-president, American Radio Relay League; Harold J. Wrape, president, Federated Radio Trades Association, and Elisha Hanson, counsel, Newspaper Broadcasters' Committee, and the American Newspaper Publishers Association.

Some of the salient features of the summary of the pending legislation coupled with the recommendations made by the committee for a practical and immediate solution of the radio muddle were as follows:

"It is the opinion of the Co-ordinating Committee that it is highly essential to secure legislation controlling radio during this session of Congress. To this end it appears that two distinct steps are necessary.

"1. The enactment of an emergency control measure, which will prevent the further complication of an already complicated situation by prohibiting the issuance of any more licenses for the operation of radio broadcasting stations after December 6, 1926.

"2. The bringing out of conference of a comprehensive and adequate general law governing the whole radio industry.

"The emergency control measure is necessary, in our opinion, because broadcasting stations are now increasing at such a rate—to be specific, one a day—as to cause not only confusion on the air but the possibility of even greater confusion. It is estimated reliably that there are now more than 20,000,000 citizens of the United States who are enthusiastic listeners to radio programs; that more than 5,000,000 citizens of the United States are the owners of radio receiving sets; that the investment of these citizens as individuals in radio is upwards of $1,500,000,000, to say nothing of the investment which broadcasting companies and commercial operators have in the industry.

"Unless immediate steps are taken by Congress to prevent confusion in the air, this great radio listening public, together with its large investment in radio, is likely to suffer a tremendous injury."

Regarding "rights to the air" the statement said:

"We believe that the theory of the right of priority of operation should be thoroughly defined. In effect this means that the allocation and use of wave lengths shall be determined on the basis of these factors:

"1. The length of time during which stations, existing at the time this Act becomes law, have operated.

"2. The character of service rendered by them.

CHICAGO TRIBUNE WINS CITIZENS $700,000

Real Estate Expert Returns $432,000 to City and Escapes Suit by Daily —Payment of $277,000 Stopped

The Chicago Tribune won the first round of its fight to recover for the city of Chicago fees paid real estate experts during the William Hale Thompson regime as mayor, when Ernest H. Lyons, chief of the experts, made restitution to the city on Dec. 4, to the face amount of $432,053.38. Mr. Lyons "purchased his peace" by the payment, and in return the attorneys for the Tribune were given leave to dismiss him from the defendants.

The trial against the other experts and former city officials against whom the Tribune started suit as a taxpayer more than five years ago will be resumed this week. The suit is for the recovery of $1,732,279 paid to three real estate experts as alleged exorbitant fees in 1920 on the five projects involved in the "Chicago Beautiful" ordinances. The suit is being conducted at the expense of the Tribune and all money recovered goes into the city treasury for the benefit of all taxpayers.

In addition to the payment of the $432,053, face value, by Lyons, the filing of the suit prevented the payment of $277,000 in fees at the outset, so that the total profit to taxpayers to date has been more than $700,000.

As a taxpayer, the Tribune suit contended that $45,000 would have been a reasonable fee for the three real estate experts, whose total claim was for $2,015,000. The trial of the real estate experts started last March, and the records in the suit are so voluminous that as yet the Tribune's counsel has not finished its presentation of the case. The record already runs over 6,000 pages and more than 1,200 exhibits have been introduced.

Corporation Counsel Francis X. Busch characterized the Lyons restitution of the $432,053 not only as a big stroke toward winning the action, but as a move that will have a far-reaching effect on future conduct of persons in high political power.

"It strengthens the case immensely," he said, "and more than that, it shows that those things cannot be done with impunity."

"The Tribune should be thanked for its splendid contribution to public service. We have been glad to co-operate."

"I'D DO IT ALL OVER AGAIN" SAYS PAYNE

Mirror Editor Who Revived Hall-Mills Case Declares Crusading Pays, Not in Circulation But in Public Service—"It Was a Grand Fight"

By PHILIP SCHUYLER

DOES crusading journalism pay?

Philip A. Payne, managing editor of the New York Daily Mirror, who revived the Hall-Mills case and made of it a crusade against alleged corrupted justice, pondered this question this week. New York papers carried stories of threatened libel suits against the Mirror to be brought by attorneys for Mrs. Frances Stevens Hall, Willie Stevens, Henry Stevens, and Henry Carpenter, acquitted of a murder charge. Mr. Payne pondered the question and his reply was:

"It does pay. I would do it all over again. It was a grand fight."

Further, Mr. Payne declared in an interview with EDITOR & PUBLISHER that the Hall-Mills story was stopped "only for the time being," as far as the Mirror is concerned.

Five letters have reached Mr. Payne's desk threatening his life as a result of the Mirror's action in reviving the case and in backing the prosecution. Mr. Payne dismisses them as "silly twaddle." Many other letters have come commending his stand.

In the face of the threatened libel suits against the Mirror, Mr. Payne repeated his frequently published dare to arrest him on a charge of criminal libel.

"I've publicly invited Timothy Pfeiffer, attorney for Mrs. Hall, at least fifty times to arrest me on a criminal libel charge," Payne declared this week. "Let him arrest me now. I live in New Jersey. He can find out my address. I'm not afraid of civil suits, either. Anyone can file a civil suit for libel."

Mr. Pfeiffer, questioned by EDITOR & PUBLISHER, confirmed the published reports of impending civil libel suits. He declined to divulge the amounts that would be asked, or indicate when the suits would be filed. He said he himself was not interested in bringing suit for criminal libel against Mr. Payne.

Naturally Mr. Payne would not disclose what steps his paper was planning to take toward a possible new Hall-Mills story, but he recalled significantly that two years after Walter S. Ward, wealthy self-confessed murderer, had been set free by a Westchester county court, he published the true details of the slaying in the Mirror. His editorial slogan in the Ward case was:

"Can a rich man commit murder and get away with it?"

In the interview this week, Mr. Payne showed that the same question was still uppermost in his mind. He declared he did not have to defend the action of the Mirror in reviving the Hall-Mills case, insisted the story had not increased the Mirror's circulation, assailed what he termed was the smugness and self-satisfaction of many "social-register-minded" newspapers of today, and disclosed hitherto unpublished details in connection with the widely published affair and the part played in it by the tabloid paper he edits.

"There is nothing for me to defend," he declared. "Please make that plain. I would do it all over again."

"I knew I had no chance for a conviction in Somerset county. I did hope for a second trial with a foreign jury."

"I still believe that whenever there is evidence of corruption of justice, it is the duty of a newspaper to expose it. The Mirror still believes there is evidence of corruption in Somerset county. We said the trial would not be fair in Somerset county and the trial was not fair."

"Senator Simpson has said that 'Jersey Justice' should be embalmed and sent to the British Museum. I echo what the senator has said, with the exception that I would rather not insult the British Museum."

"Besides printing the news, I believe a newspaper should perform public service. Many other newspaper editors hold the same belief. In the name of public service they expose the Ku Klux Klan, negro lynchings in South Carolina, and conduct oratorical contests on the Constitution and essay contests on the current news. I chose to crusade against what I had reason to believe was tampered justice."

"Why shouldn't I? The whole country is agitated over crime. In New York State the Baumes law is passed. Under its provisions a man may be sentenced to the courtroom. Does he get up and get a drink when he wants it? No, a court attendant may, if he feels inclined, bring the defendant a drink. He is convicted speedily and electrocuted."

"The only way to get people to obey the law is to see to it that all persons accused get an equal chance in the courts. They don't get it now. A rich man can do anything and get away with it."

"We on the Mirror didn't do anything jail for life, if he is convicted of crime four times. He may steal a bicycle and be convicted in the first instance; in the second it may be a loaf of bread; in the third for carrying a revolver; in the fourth for putting slugs in a subway slot—and he may be sent to jail for life."

"Meanwhile, Fall, Doheny and Sinclair are indicted for an alleged swindle involving millions. They are wealthy people. Poor people would have been thrown shackled into the hoosegow in the time taken to bring these men to trial. Is Sinclair in jail? No, the papers print pictures of him at the race track betting on the horses."

"What sort of exhibition is this for the man in the street taught to believe that the very cornerstone of this country is equality?"

"Chief Justice Taft has been quoted as saying that criminal justice in the United States today is disgraceful. It is disgraceful."

"Just consider the difference between the trial of poor people charged with murder and the Hall-Mills trial that has ended in an acquittal. There was a murder trial conducted like a tea party."

"The defendants sat in the court pit surrounded by their relatives. No guards watched over them. If they wanted a drink of water they got up and got it for themselves. And yet they were on trial for murder. A grand jury in a hostile county had indicted them in 22 minutes. Two courts had upheld that there was prima facie evidence of murder guilt."

"In contrast, 'Tony Boloney,' sharing a bottle of wine with a friend, gets into an argument, gets excited, pulls out a black-jack and murder is committed. Tony is indicted for murder. He goes on trial. Two cops stand guard over his chair in that Joseph Pulitzer wouldn't have done 30 years ago."

"The trouble today is that half the newspapers are too smug and self-satisfied. They have too many social connections. They agitate for the Baumes law, because that is against the poor people. The rich appear to have more sacred blood."

Mr. Payne briefly outlined the Hall-Mills story as it had been handled by him in the Mirror with frequent advice from S. S. Carvalho, of the Hearst general management. William Randolph Hearst, he said, had played no part in the crusade and had not commented on it since conclusion of the trial.

There was a double murder in New Jersey that had lain unsolved for four years. The finger of suspicion was pointed at the recently acquitted defendants. There were obvious reasons why these wealthy people might be suspected of guilty knowledge of the crime. Motive was one reason. There was reason to believe that the case reeked with corruption. The murdered pair had been buried without autopsy. A private detective was engaged by Mrs. Hall and sheltered in her home. No reward was offered. Attorneys for Mrs. Hall tried hard to pin the crime on James Mills.

The Mirror, Mr. Payne said, started its investigation by focusing all the attention on Mills. He had been told by a detective certain things that led him to believe that the arrest of Mills might mean the solution of the murder mystery. Later he learned that this detective was a friend of Henry Stevens, and had written Stevens he would try to help him.

The Ku Klux Klan was strongly entrenched in Somerset county. Mr. Payne saw to it this organization was investigated. He became satisfied that the K. K. K. was mixed up in the murder. But, as the investigations continued, he became even more firmly convinced that Jane Gibson, the "pig woman," was telling the truth. While there was room for the belief that the Klan might be playing a part in the murder, the prosecution had an eye-witness placing the defendants on the scene. Mr. Payne didn't want to make a campaign on a religious issue. He wanted it to be a criminal issue.

"What motive would Jane Gibson have for lying?" was an obvious question. Mr. Payne could find no motive.

Nellie Russell, an important witness for the defense four years ago, had testified that Jane Gibson had not left her home on the murder night. The Mirror found that Nellie had a bad police record. She was not called to the witness stand in the trial just ended.

Then Mr. Payne obtained the alleged finger print of Willie Stevens on Mr. Hall's calling card in the manner he has explained in testimony before the court.

The Mirror laid its case before Gov. Moore of New Jersey, the case was opened, and it was everybody's story.

"The Hall-Mills story didn't help the Mirror's circulation," Mr. Payne insisted. "In the first place it wasn't a tabloid story. There was too much sameness to the daily pictures. We couldn't give the space to it that the standard size papers could. Some of the New York papers were carrying 15,000 and 18,000 words a day during the trial. Such coverage was impossible for a tabloid. In one issue the New York Times printed 33 columns of solid type on the trial."

"The only beat we got was on the arrest of Mrs. Hall. Since we had revived the case, I think we were entitled to some reward."

"I see nothing improper in our conduct of the trial story in the Mirror. The defense charged that I was responsible for the dramatic sickbed testimony of Mrs. Gibson. I didn't know that it was going to happen. I do know that Mrs. Gibson is a very sick woman. I know for a fact she cannot live much longer."

"The defense attorneys, to convince the jury, insinuated that I faked the calling card with Willie Stevens' finger print on it. If they believed I had done this, why didn't they have me arrested? I was attending the trial much of the time it was in session."

"It has been charged that our paper was biased for the prosecution. It is natural that our reporters should lean that way. Some things happened that I didn't like. But on the whole, I don't think our paper was half as biased for the prosecution as others were for the defense."

"The Mirror did not constitute itself as judge and jury in the Hall-Mills case. The results of our investigation were turned over to the proper authorities."

"It has been publicly contended that a picture we printed showing Willie Stevens placing the card at the dead rector's foot was libelous. I disagree. The Mirror took pains to state that this picture represented what the state was contending. The state's contention is on the court records."

"For the time being the story is ended. I won't admit that the case is closed."

"As the story stands now, I believe a great deal of good has been accomplished. The disgraceful condition of justice in New Jersey has been aired in every newspaper of the land and in many of the world."

"Maybe one lesson has been driven home: wealthy families cannot commit crime and cover it up by cheap local politics and local influence. Some newspaper is going to see to it that justice is served."

SPERRY FLOUR USED NEWSPAPERS TO POPULARIZE NEW CARTON

Company Joins Long List of Those Boosting Sales by New Merchandising Treatment—800 Line Copy Advertised "Kitchenette Size" Package

By HAMMOND EDWARD FRANKLIN

NEW merchandising ideas which work are doubling and tripling tangible results which may be obtained from newspaper advertising.

Even the staples, such as yeast cakes, bananas, salt, and sugar, have responded to fresh copy appeals, novel ways of selling or unusual packaging. Now, flour is being subjected to new merchandising treatment.

The Sperry Flour Company, producer of Sperry Drifted Snow Flour, the largest selling flour of the West, for a long time have distributed to the public in 50, 25 or 10 pound sacks and to the baking trade. The company has used much advertising to establish its brand firmly.

The current tendency toward smaller families and smaller, but more frequent purchases, from the nearest grocery or delicatessen, "hand to mouth" style, made the company wonder if it could not cater especially to these smaller buyers and thereby widen its selling field. When letters from users came in asking for a smaller size than sacks, the company did some more thinking.

Voila! Now comes the "kitchenette" size carton of Sperry Flour, containing just four pounds and eight ounces. Flour in a carton! Well, why not?

The company's salesmen this fall went to the trade with the new carton and details of a really large sectional advertising campaign. They pointed out the tendency of many women to buy in smaller quantities, showed that a carton is easy to handle and lined up orders, with the help of newspaper merchandising men.

The apartment and small home are here to stay, in California as well as in New York. The kitchens are not large. The women in them are looking for the easiest, quickest, least space-occupying methods. Therefore, the new carton is presented as "A handier way to buy and keep Sperry Flour," giving a definite news approach. The company features the fact that the new product came into being as a suggestion from women.

Lack of uniformity in flour is then hit at. The company explains there are 200 different kinds of wheat grown from which white flour is milled. It claims that Sperry by developing the science of milling and by constant testing by six laboratories assures a uniformity of result. The consumer is invited to try this flour in its new carton or to buy a sack, if the family is sizeable.

The Sperry Flour Company does much in a publicity way to keep in the lime-light. For instance, it maintains 14 lofts of 300 homing pigeons, which carry messages when distinguished visitors come to the state of California and on other state occasions. The company's domestic science department answers questions of consumers and sends out "Recipes women talk about."

Twenty-two full page and 800 line advertisements as well as posters in street cars through southern California are getting over the new container.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER has outlined how the United Fruit Company, through a subsidiary, placed packaged and guaranteed ripe bananas on the market. One effect was to obtain dealers who had never bothered with the fruit in bulk.

The Sun Maid Raisin Growers long ago demonstrated that packaging and advertising are profitable. This winter they are getting over specific kinds of packages, Sun Maid Nectars, "like fresh grapes" and Sun Maid Puffed Raisins "that aren't sticky," which offer a new merchandising approach to trade and consumer.

An improvement in the product, or a product with new advantages over its competitors, lends itself as a result-getter to the dealer and manufacturer. The Betty Bright self-wringing mop—"wrings itself"—sold well by exploiting this feature. One department store disposed of 432 in three days and another 323 in one day from store copy.

The W. A. Sheaffer Pen Company sell a fountain pen ink called Skrip, "the successor to ink." The company has discontinued making its conventional four-ounce bottle. Instead, it now gets out an odd-shaped, keystone bottle which permits filling a pen to the last drop of ink.

The Klein Chocolate Company of Elizabethtown (Pa.) has put on the market a new line of Klein's Almond Bar, Sweet Milk Chocolate Cake and Peanut Lunch Bar which it is advertising in full pages.

A four-sided special display rack, something like that used for displaying souvenir postals, is furnished to set on the counter on a pedestal. This makes a merchandising feature for the copy, enables the company to interest the dealer in placing a larger starting order and the display alone makes many sales.

Last Christmas a packer took his best ham, wrapped it in cellophane and scored a fine leap in sales. Some fig producers pick their best fruit, stuff it with nuts, wrap it in cellophane and greatly increase its appeal and profit possibilities.

The fish producers have learned that by taking out the bones and other waste and wrapping the best white haddock in pound packages wrapped in parchment paper, they can sell millions of pounds just like butter. It took 300 years for this industry to work this out, but after a long period of doldrums 15 per cent more fish was consumed last year.

Newspaper advertising is performing a real service in offering a method of testing out varied merchandising ideas in a small area—then whizzing the new plan across the country as fast as the company can work—and following through until the idea is established.

J. J. Fox of Ft. Worth Star-Telegram Joins Post-Dispatch

Joseph J. Fox, news editor of the Fort Worth Star-Telegram and for 11 years with that daily, became managing editor of the Houston (Tex.) Post-Dispatch Dec. 1.

Prior to his departure from Fort Worth, Fox was tendered a surprise dinner at which 30 men of the Star-Telegram were present. They presented Fox with a set of Kipling. There were no speeches other than an 18 second talk by J. M. North, Jr., editor-in-chief of the Carter publications, who said, "Joe not only has the friendship of the men here and of the officials of the company, but he also has the backing of both any time, any place he goes."

Fox, a native Texan, went to West Texas in 1900. He began newspaper work in 1910 in Weatherford on the Herald, went to Gainesville in 1911, joined the Shreveport Times in 1912, and came to the Fort Worth Record later that year. He joined the Star-Telegram in 1913 and then went to Houston as managing editor of the Telegram which suspended in 1915. He then rejoined the Star-Telegram where he has been since.

NEW ZEALANDERS AVID NEWSPAPER READERS

Islands Now Have 200 Papers, Says G. S. Craig, Here to Get Good Ideas for a Daily at Auckland

Although New Zealand already has "more papers to the acre than any other country in the world," according to G. S. Craig, financial editor and large shareholder in the Christchurch (N. Z.) Sun the Sun publishers intend to add on more daily to the list next March, when the Auckland (N. Z.) Sun is scheduled to begin publication. Mr. Craig is now in the country getting ideas for the new paper and studying American newspaper methods. He was interviewed in New York this week by EDITOR & PUBLISHER.

"There are more than 200 papers in New Zealand now," Mr. Craig said, "and the country is about the same size as Great Britain which hasn't half that number. Our Islands are about 1,000 miles long and have a population of about half a million."

"The reason why there are so many papers is because our transportation and communication systems are not as advanced as they are in this country. Most of the New Zealand papers are small, most of them are good newspapers. Every little town has its paper, each one doing splendid work in keeping its public informed on world affairs."

"Virtually all of these papers are prosperous, too. I personally know of only one paper that isn't paying and that is frankly a political organ. In some of the smaller towns the owner of the paper is able to draw down a profit of $10,000 a year."

In Auckland, the new paper will have a competitor in the evening field, but Mr. Craig is confident there is room for two afternoon papers in this city, which he said, now has an estimated population of about 200,000.

The building for the Auckland Sun was copied after that of the San Francisco Chronicle, Mr. Craig said. It is now virtually completed, and equipment is being moved in. When finished it will represent an investment of $500,000. The press equipment used by the New Zealand papers in the majority of cases is of American manufacture. The Christchurch Sun was first to install a Hoe superspeed press and many other New Zealand papers followed suit. English type-setting machines are used; and Mr. Craig told of a stereotype machine of Swiss manufacture, which, he said, outclassed every other similar machine he has ever seen for speed.

"New Zealand papers are still conservative," Mr. Craig continued. "They follow the English school, whereas in Australia the trend is definitely American. When we start the Auckland Sun, we may break traditions of that city by putting news on the front page. Most of our papers fill page one with classified ads, although there is a paper in Christchurch now that runs news. Personally I think the best idea for morning papers is that of the London Daily Mail, which carries a full page display advertisement on its first page."

"We are also conservative as to paper size. There are still no tabloids in New Zealand, although I expect they must come in time because of their convenience for reading in crowded quarters."

During his present trip to this country, Mr. Craig has so far inspected the plants of the San Francisco Chronicle, the Chicago Tribune, Philadelphia Public Ledger, and the New York Times.

SAUK CENTER PAPERS MERGED

Merger of the Sauk Center (Minn.) Herald and the Sauk Center News was disclosed with the recent filing of articles of incorporation for Sauk Center Publishers, Inc., capitalized at $20,000. Asa M. Wallace, editor of the Herald, will be editor of the consolidated paper and Edwin L. Rothe, former editor of the News, will be vice-president.

BANALITY A VIRTUE IN CHRISTMAS AD COPY

"Don't Try for Originality" Advises Mrs. Helen Woodward—Former Agency Woman Strips Advertising Business of Its "Guff"—Hits Commission System

By PHILIP SCHUYLER

"CHRISTMAS advertising should be banal."

"Of course, it was rather a surprising beginning. But then I should have remembered that Helen Woodward, author of that new book 'Through Many Windows,' who began the conversation that way, was the wife of W. E. Woodward, author of 'Bunk' and also of the latest 'Washington,' an engagingly debunked portrait of the father of our country.

I had thought of Helen Woodward as an extremely brilliant and original writer of advertisements, and had been properly awed by the praise bestowed on her by the usually derisive H. L. Mencken. Mr. Mencken, you may recall, when he reviewed 'Through Many Windows' in the American Mercury, took the chance to remark that really good writers of books in America in the future will undoubtedly come from the ranks of advertising writers, rather than, as now, from the city rooms of our smartest newspapers.

When I asked Mrs. Woodward about Christmas advertising in her apartment in Greenwich Village, I had wanted her to be original and clever. Instead, she was pleasantly candid and went right into the business of taking what she called the "guff" out of this advertising business.

"No one in advertising believes the guff, you know," she said.

"Try to be original when you're writing advertisements, and you'll find your copy will fall flat," Mrs. Woodward said. "Selling words must come out of your mind naturally, just like that—". And the vivid woman flicked her cigarette dangerously near her black boyish bob.

"Original advertising is never good. Christmas advertising above all others should be banal," she repeated. "Isn't that the whole idea of Christmas, anyway? This season we are now in seems to me the greatest illustration of mob psychology I know of—everyone sticking to tradition, giving each other presents, battling each other grouchy in department stores, and listening with universal smirks to words of love, peace and good cheer in their churches. The only possible original idea would be to stop giving gifts at Christmas time. The reverse happens to be the smart and elegant custom of today. Suppose, however, that the idea got around that it was neither fashionable nor smart to pass Christmas gifts about. How many do you think would continue the custom? It would stop like that—".

A downward wave of the arm served Mrs. Woodward for illustration of her point, coupled with an abrupt pause in what appeared to be a habit of hers of walking rapidly back and forth while she talked, from ash try to the center of the room, to the bookcases, to the table, to the center of the room again.

"Most people don't like new ideas," she continued. "You've got to be careful how you feed new stuff to them in advertisements. Always you must tone down what many copy writers think is good copy because it is bright and original."

"When an advertising writer feels a bright idea coming, he had better stop. The correct thing to do is to be banal, to follow the mob."

"A fundamental principle of all advertising is to appeal to the largest public possible. The smart set isn't worth going after exclusively except in rare instances. Any number of copy writers could be more original than they are allowed to be. I know I always could be. But all advertising must be toned down to get over. A clever advertisement almost never pays. It amuses, it is talked about, but it doesn't sell. You might be clever in the New Yorker, perhaps, or in the American Mercury. But never in the newspapers. This is sad, but true."

Came a pause and I had my opportunity to be in good form, to be banal. I asked Mrs. Woodward to give me her rules for writing selling advertising copy.

"Oh, very well," she said. "That's easy."

"Be simple."

"Don't give your readers a chance to think."

"Tell them tactfully and courteously just what you want them to do."

"And above all, try to tie up your copy to the profoundly fundamental human emotions, such as love, fear, jealousy, of its kind in the country, asked her about his advertising. He was an idealist. He wanted to cut price talk and bargains out of his copy.

"Don't you do it," Mrs. Woodward advised. "Bargain talk in advertising can't be beaten. The public always wants to know price, no matter how high class the store or the goods are. And these smart pictures that are amusing but don't show anything are no good for department store advertising. The way the majority envy, curiosity, and snobbishness.

"Fear must be handled mighty carefully. If the reader of an advertisement based on fear gets frightened enough, his pocketbook closes."

"The other emotions are all worth tying Christmas copy to. I remember I based my advertising written to sell Mark Twain's books on one of the most fundamental emotions in the world—the longing to be a child again. That same idea is first rate for Christmas selling. The O. Henry copy I wrote was based on curiosity and love, courage and chance."

"These latter are great emotions. Who doesn't want to experience them, if not in reality at least vicariously?"

"Because it plays to the emotions rather than intelligence of its public, the tabloid, to my mind, is the finest kind of pure advertisement. Every news page is written on the true advertising theory. In its pictures the tabloid has instantaneous eye-catching value, and its editor appears always at pains to arouse curiosity, by serializing everything, even the news."

Mrs. Woodward was asked for ideas for Christmas, advertising copy, banal, but possibly overlooked.

"Here's one," she complied. "You know people are always trying to imitate their neighbors. Children would get much simpler and less expensive gifts than they do if this were not so. Then have a picture drawn for any variety of toy, a sled, a high priced velocipede, anything, showing two families, one the prospective purchaser, the other his neighbor. The neighbor's child has the toy. How disappointed the other child is! No one wants this to happen. Mother or Dad don't want to have the baby disappointed. And the price of the toy is only—, a real bargain. Buy it today at the—store."

"Snobbishness makes a good advertising peg—and envy. I remember once I was writing advertisements for some lace curtains. The copy I chose was illustrated with the windows of well known wealthy women. This same idea might be worked to sell expensive Christmas gifts."

While Mrs. Woodward has never written any department store advertising, it has interested her. Not long ago the head of a big store, one of the largest are doing now, actually picturing the merchandise for sale, can not be bettered."

In her advertising rules, Mrs. Woodward had said: "Don't give your readers a chance to think."

That sounds easy enough when it refers to oral salesmanship, with the high-powered go-getter roaring like an automobile racer up to the dotted line. I wondered if it was really possible in type, between rules on a newsprint page.

"You're partly right," she said, "We can't do it as much as we'd like to. Still it is possible. You can refuse to let your readers reflect and make them act. If they think a lot they won't buy any goods. You've got to hurry them through. Most buying, after all, is on the impulse. In a written advertisement you must jump from thought to thought quickly. Your copy must move as swiftly as a musical revue. And then wind up with a snap on the thought of buying."

Mrs. Woodward was even franker than this in telling what advertising is all about in her book, "Through Many Windows." She rather expected some hot repercussions. Instead, the heads of many important agencies have written her congratulatory letters. Her book was reviewed favorably in the New York Herald Tribune by E. St. Elmo Calkins, head of Calkins & Holden, Inc., New York advertising agency. Charles W. Hoyt, president of Charles W. Hoyt, Inc., George Metzger, of Hanff-Metzger, Inc., and S. Roland Hall, are among many who have written in praise of her book.

And in this book is a strong attack against the present agency commission system, which Mrs. Woodward carried further in the interview.

In her book, she wrote:

"The agency ought to be paid by the advertiser rather than by the periodical. If you are unfamiliar with the situation, you may think that it is the agencies alone that cling to the present arrangement in the face of the hardened antagonism of the advertiser. No. There are agencies which would prefer to be paid by the advertiser, because they feel they would hold his confidence better. But the advertiser himself often stands firmly in favor of the present arrangement."

"The advertiser is a perfect dumbbell," Mrs. Woodward charged in the interview. "The present system is grotesque. Supposing a lawyer's fee should be based on the amount of money he paid out for his client, supposing an architect should be paid in accordance with the cost of the house he designs. It's perfectly absurd."

"A flat fee should be paid the agencies by the advertisers. As long as the system is continued on its present basis advertising will never reach its highest possible standard. The agencies are making more money now. The advertiser doesn't realize that the present arrangement makes the agency spend a lot of money sometimes foolishly. An agent wouldn't be human if he worked his head off to save an advertiser money. He wants as big an appropriation as he can get."

"But the present system isn't as good for the agency as the agents seem to think. Very few advertisers really trust their agencies. The agents can't see that far ahead."

Despite this and other frank discussions, "Through Many Windows" has not yet caused its author "a whisper of trouble," she said.

"The advertising business is on to itself," Mrs. Woodward said. "No one in the business believes the guff in it."

Mrs. Woodward just "fell into the advertising business, like everybody else." She was the stenographer for the advertising manager of a book concern, and, she says, "not a very good stenographer at that."

She used a dictaphone and never learned shorthand. Then she started writing her boss's letters for him, and a few advertisements. She was on her way to success. For a while she was with the old Hampton Agency. She started with Harry Porter when he started the Harry Porter Company, Inc., and worked with him on a commission basis for seven years. She also had considerable experience working for the Frank Presbrey Company. Finally she conducted her own agency. Now, after having her first book published, she intends to devote all her time to writing.

LEGAL BATTLE OPENS AS McDERMOTT FACES JURY FOR MELLETT MURDER

Defense in Trial Growing Out of Murder of Editor Who Attacked Lawless Elements, Attempts to Justify the Crime

By CHARLES E. MORRIS
Publisher, Canton (Ohio) News

CANTON, Ohio, Dec. 8.—The trial of Patrick McDermott jointly indicted with Ben Rudner, Louis Mazer and "others" for the murder of Don R. Mellett, the crusading publisher of the Canton Daily News, is under way.

At this date the jury is still tentative, but it is promised that by Saturday the prosecution and defense will have been outlined, when the state will begin presenting its evidence.

Had there been nothing else to show it, the defense tactics to date would have been complete justification for the fight waged by editor Mellett in an effort to cleanse a community of crime and destroy the unholy alliance between criminals and police leaders; for the defense has sought to reverse the process of criminal procedure by attacking the newspaper Mellett conducted and in a sense to justify the sentence of execution carried out against him by the evil forces he had offended.

The state expects to show that McDermott, a youthful Pennsylvania barber and ex-convict, was employed by the others to murder Mellett because his activities were interfering with their bootlegging and other crime incomes; and the state's chief witness, Steve Kascholk who says he is the man employed by McDermott to help the latter "beat up an editor" and then weakened when the contemplated beating turned to proposed shooting.

McDermott's defense, all legal dodges aside, will be to accuse Kascholk, himself, although still adhering to his general denial that he knows nothing about the murder.

The state had counted on McDermott telling all, but McDermott refused unless he might be assured of immunity which the state could not grant. He has declined to make any explanation of his hiding away for months after the murder until surrendered by his family in the hope that he might fare easier if guilty, by turning state's evidence. McDermott's attitude, as expressed to jailers, is that he can take his chance with a jury at least until he learns what the state has to present.

In the procedure to date there has been so much legal battling that the central issue has been all but forgotten, even by most newspapers represented.

The prosecution seeks to show that Don Mellett was murdered, because, as an editor, he was outspoken against crime, and that the men indicted were the ring leaders in the conspiracy; and the state also has the decision of the Ohio Industrial Commission, which made full death award to Mrs. Mellett, because her husband was killed in line of duty.

How the defense will combat the direct charge against McDermott has been indicated by the accusation against the witness Kascholk; how it will combat the establishment of motive has been indicated by the questioning of jurors, some of whom were asked if it would make any difference because the murdered man was an editor and some of those accused, were perhaps bootleggers; and further by the injection of the religious prejudice element, because McDermott is a Catholic and Rudner and Mazer are Jews.

Meanwhile as the McDermott trial proceeds, the defendants, Rudner and Mazer, who represent the moneyed end of the alleged murder conspiracy, have taken appeal to the Supreme Court of Ohio for release on bond, and bond is ready for them if the court acts favorably.

Search for witnesses by the state has uncovered a widespread conspiracy to violate the liquor law, but the district attorney is marking time in prosecution, pending the outcome of the murder trials.

It is explained for him that he cannot do otherwise, but the federal officials in Washington have denied him the assistance requested, which the state authorities believe would have brought complete solution of the Mellett murder long before this time.

The disquieting thing, even for officials seeking to perform duty against threats, is that so many newspapers seem to take this as "just another murder trial," when it is the first trial growing out of a murder to still the voice of the press in a conspiracy consummated by an act as defiant as it was deliberate; and which ought be handled in a way to make it the last trial of its kind.

DALE IS CONVICTED OF CRIMINAL LIBEL

Muncie Editor Sentenced to 90 Days on Penal Farm and $400 Fine—Another Attempt Made on His Life

George R. Dale, publisher of the Muncie (Ind.) Post-Democrat, was found guilty of criminal libel by a jury and was fined $400 and sentenced to 90 days on the State Penal Farm at Muncie, Saturday night, Dec. 4. The charge was the outgrowth of an article printed in Dale's paper concerning Raymond Warner, 24 years old, of Muncie.

Twenty-five minutes after the jury brought in the verdict of guilty, an attack for the fifth time within a few weeks was made on Dale's home. This time it was a bullet fired through the front door into a room in which Dale, his wife and two daughters were sitting discussing the day's trial. The bullet went through two rooms, but harmed no one. A few days before a bullet was fired throughout a window of Dale's home and on three occasions before that stones were hurled through the windows. All the missiles missed their mark.

Dale was charged with having defamed the character of Warner, who was a juror in another case in which Dale was convicted of libel. Dale had alleged that Warner was involved in liquor deals. The publisher did not testify in his own defense and denial was not made of the publication of the article.

The defense attempted to show that Warner had violated the prohibition law in helping obtain evidence to bring about the arrests of Court Asher, former lieutenant of D. C. Stephenson, ex-klan leader, now serving a life sentence in the Indiana State Prison for murder, and Jesse Eiler in 1923, when Warner was deputy sheriff of Delaware County. The defense also contended that the former deputy sheriff left Muncie for Colorado at one time with four youths, following the theft of an automobile.

During the trial defense attorneys declared that Warner was taken before a recent session of the Delaware County Grand Jury while Wilbur Ryman, present prosecutor, was deputy prosecutor, and the grand jurors failed to return an indictment against Dale. The defense asserted that Warner was later induced by Ryman to file an affidavit that formed the basis of the recent trial.

As a result of the frequent attacks on his home Dale, in last week's edition of his paper, said that local authorities were permitting vice conditions to flourish in Muncie and that he was not receiving proper protection from the authorities. He also said that he had applied for Federal aid to clean up a situation which he termed similar to that at Herrin, Ill. He announced that the repeated attempts to assassinate him and members of his family had induced him to sell or give away his paper if possible and leave Muncie, not through personal fear, but because he did not wish his wife and children to be killed. In last Saturday's paper, Dale said that he had abandoned the idea of quitting publication of his paper and would "stick around." He said that his threat to leave town had been taken "too seriously" by his enemies.

Following the verdict in Saturday's case Dale announced that he will take an appeal to the Supreme Court.

NO RECEIVER NAMED

But U. S. Marshal Is Made Custodian of Boston Telegram Property

Petition for appointment of a receiver for the Boston Telegram Company, publisher of the Boston Telegram, which later was changed to Boston Telegraph, filed Nov. 29, has been denied by the United States District Court at Boston. This petition was made by Stephen H. Dalton, formerly managing editor, one of three former employees of paper who Sept. 26 petitioned the Boston Telegram Company into bankruptcy. The petition was supported by affidavit of Olin L. Fuller, former business manager and majority stockholder.

Although the petition was refused, the court appointed U. S. Marshal William G. Keville as custodian of the company's property at 95 Portland street, Boston, in whose possession it now is under lock and key.

Marshal Keville is now handling all correspondence addressed to the company. Frederick W. Enwright, who at first denied bankruptcy and made a claim for a jury trial to determine the bankruptcy, waived his right to a jury trial, and the question of adjudication is now before United States Referee in Bankruptcy D. W. Lincoln, of Worcester.

SAYS NEWSPAPERS ARE BEST AD MEDIUM

Hamilton, Ont., Department Store Director Declares News Ranks Next to Food in Importance—Says Ads Are News

Newspapers were acclaimed as the greatest of advertising mediums in an address given this week at Hamilton, Ont., by Ald. Theodore G. Morgan of Montreal. Alderman Morgan, who is a director of Henry Morgan & Co., Ltd., Montreal spoke before the Advertising Club of Hamilton. In part he said: "We sell goods to-day by influencing public opinion. Advertising is therefore informative as well as educational. How can we best influence public opinion? We must first find out what the public wants. I believe the greatest force in the world to-day is news. It is news the public craves. News takes its place in the front rank with food in importance.

"The newspaper has become a great force in our social life. It is an economic factor in distribution. It is at once our literature, our school, our buying guide. We live in a newspaper age. Active, restless, wanting to be everywhere at once, to know everything that is taking place in the world, we demand our daily paper.

"The daily paper reflects the drama of life. It tells what others are doing—and we are powerful imitators. It suggests things to do, places to see, what to buy and wear. The readers want to share the same experiences so we go, we see, we buy, in a word, we imitate.

"The newspaper means something different to each one of us. To the social climber it keeps her informed, perhaps even giving her the desired publicity. To the business man it is the barometer of trade. To the man or woman out of work it is the avenue to a job. To the buyer it is the greatest commercial directory.

"We want to improve our lot. Some day we hope to own a car, buy a house, wear new clothes, enjoy unknown luxuries.

A great newspaper gives us many ideas, kindles desire, awakens dormant hopes, brings action.

"And so the newspaper has become a very intimate part of our complex existence. If we do not know what has happened, we are out of it. If we have missed an opportunity to save money, or to be the first to acquire something, we feel upset. What others are acquiring, we want too.

"To this great medium has come advertising, and this is a vital contribution of news, whether announcing a fresh shipment of fruit a new style of hat, or dress, or some place to go. The daily newspaper is the great medium of attack to high and low, rich and poor. It is no respecter of persons. So long as stores believe what they have to sell is news, and treat it interestingly and honestly, they will prosper by advertising. A good store announcement will contain just as much of interest to the average woman as the social column. If a newspaper wishes to carry more store advertising it should develop its departments devoted to the sphere of woman. "Let them create more interested woman readers. If the stores desire to produce greater pulling power in response to their advertising let them edit such advertising more creditably."

RADIO CALLED PRESS AID

William H. Rankin, head of the William H. Rankin Company, New York, declared it has paid the newspapers to foster and father the radio industry in an address before the Advertising Club of New York, Dec. 2. Radio advertising can only be successful when combined with strong advertising campaigns in other media—preferably the newspapers, he said. He concluded by arguing that radio broadcasting had helped increase the circulation of every daily newspaper in the United States.

FILES OF MACON TELEGRAPH SPAN 100 YEARS OF AMERICAN LIFE

Georgia Daily, Which Celebrated Centennial Thanksgiving Day, Founded by Myron Bartlett in 1826—
W. T. Anderson Present Publisher

THE Macon (Ga.) Telegraph which celebrated the one hundredth anniversary of its founding on Thanksgiving Day, is the surviving representative of a number of Georgia newspapers which flourished at various times during the nineteenth century.

It is a far cry from the Telegraph which young Myron Bartlett, of New Hampshire, issued to the public of Macon on Nov. 1, 1826, and the huge Centennial edition which the Macon Telegraph issued on Thanksgiving Day, 1926, celebrating its 100 birthday.

The Georgia Messenger the first paper published in Bibb County, was published when Macon was Fort Hawkins and in the year 1823. Three years later the young Dr. Myron Bartlett came to Georgia and established the Macon Telegraph.

Over in Milledgeville, Ga., which was then the capital of Georgia, there was a small paper, the Georgia Journal which had been in existence since 1808. Soon after the advent of the Telegraph the Journal and the Messenger were merged and published under that name. In a few years later a paper from Albany, Ga., the Albany Courier was merged with the Journal and Messenger.

In the meanwhile the Telegraph was going along its own way under the direction of Myron Bartlett, who had come to be recognized as one of the great editorial writers of Georgia. Under his editorship the Telegraph soon became an outstanding journal.

The ambitious young man brought out on Oct. 31, 1831, the first daily paper ever published in Macon. But the daily was not practical for Macon and the project was abandoned early in the next year.

In 1844 Myron Bartlett was succeeded by Oliver H. Prince who remained editor until 1847 when he was succeeded by Samuel Ray. It was Ray who made pronounced improvements on the paper. He removed the unsightly advertisements from the front page and substituted a supply of live news.

Joseph Clisby won fame as editor of the Telegraph during the War Between the States period. He began his editorship in 1855. On Jan. 12, 1864, Clisby announced that in the future the Telegraph would be published daily and his was the first successful attempt at a daily paper in Macon.

On Sept. 19, 1864, Clisby announced that he had sold the paper and that Henry L. Flash, editor of the Confederate, another paper published in Macon, would become editor. The late days of the war were trying for Georgia and for the Telegraph. When Macon was a captured city the Telegraph was printed by volunteer printers who got the type from the floor and used it to publish a small sheet which carried the announcement of the assassination of Lincoln.

The reconstruction period saw the changing of the Telegraph from hand to hand until finally in 1896 C. L. Pendleton bought the controlling interest and became its editor. He continued until the year of his death 1914. Mr. Pendleton was probably the best known of the Telegraph's editors. His editorials were quoted all over the country.

On Thanksgiving Day, 1914, announcement was made that W. T. Anderson, business manager of the paper, has bought the controlling stock and Mr. Anderson has been editor and publisher since that time.

In a front page editorial in the 160-page Centennial edition of the Telegraph, Mr. Anderson spoke of the general rules and policies of the paper as follows:

"These men were told that the news department was to be operated free and independent of the other departments. That no man in the news was supposed to know what the editorial policy was—that he was not even supposed to read editorials except as a matter of information. It was explained that many newspapers, despite their protesting to the contrary, shaped their news and colored it according to the way the editor or publisher thought. In this office there was to be the truth always, the fullest information, gathered carefully and written truthfully. And then both the editorial writers and the public would have the same sources of information, their facts would be the same so far as possible, and if the editor and the public disagreed, it would be an honest and intelligent difference and not one of deception and double dealing."

The closing paragraph of Mr. Anderson's editorial follows: "That's all there is to the Telegraph. And so sincerely do I regard it as a public institution and myself as a transitory custodian, that I feel that there are hands being prepared and waiting to catch the torch whenever I shall fail. Be theirs to hold it high, that the Telegraph may live and serve, and possibly in the great day when man's work shall have been finished and all the world shall be looked upon as good, we may be given the privilege to gaze down from on high and see our part of the wonderful arch that is now so far from finished."

COMPLAINT PRIVILEGED NEW COURT RULE

Judgment for $6,124 Against N. Y. Evening Post Reversed—Ruling Settles Long Disputed Legal Point

Right of the press to publish the contents of officially filed complaints instituting suits of law without risk of libel was sustained in a unanimous decision handed down Dec. 3 by the New York Appellate Division.

In accordance with this ruling the court reversed a judgment of $6,124 rendered against the New York Evening Post by a jury sitting before Supreme Court Justice Philip J. McCook and dismissed the complaint of Mrs. Anne McCoy Campbell, a Christian Science practitioner. The decision will affect additional libel actions brought by Mrs. Campbell against other newspapers and apparently settles a legal point long disputed.

The Post and other newspapers printed in 1922 a report of the contents of papers in an action filed in the County Clerk's office by Mrs. Elizabeth Nichols against Mrs. Campbell and another person, seeking to recover $16,000 damages suffered as the result of alleged fraud. Later Mrs. Nichols discontinued the suit and retracted the charges.

Mrs. Campbell brought actions for libel against several newspapers, declaring that her reputation had suffered from the publication of false statements which were not privileged. In her action against the New York Times the jury returned a verdict for the defendant. Mrs. Campbell met with varying fortune in the other cases.

In its decision yesterday the Appellate Division said:

"We are of the opinion that in no event can the plaintiff recover in the present action and that the plaintiff's action must be dismissed. We are of the opinion that the publication of the article in question was privileged upon the ground that it was a fair and true report of a judicial proceeding within the meaning of the provisions of 337 of the Civil Practice act."

The Court pointed out that this section exempted newspapers from libel suits for printing fair and true reports of any judicial proceeding, unless actual malice in making the report could be proved.

The issue, it was said, was directly presented to the lower court when counsel for the Post asked Justice McCook to charge the jury that the filing of the complaint against Mrs. Campbell in the County Clerk's office, together with the filing of the answer, constituted a judicial proceeding, the facts of which could legally be published. The Court refused the request and, instead charged that the filing of the complaint did not carry with it the privilege of republication.

Declaring that Justice McCook erred, the Appellate Division said: "The evidence shows that the article in question was a fair and true report of the contents of the complaint in the action for fraud brought against the plaintiff. We think it cannot be questioned but that the complaint which was placed on file in the office of the Clerk of the county, the filing of the answer of the plaintiff antedating by a day the filing of said complaint, was a step in a judicial proceeding."

According to the Court, "the papers became public property by such filing" and constituted a public document. They were accessible to any one desiring to see them, it was pointed out, and were not improperly "the subject of comment and discussion in the public press."

Contrary implications in a decision in a previous case involving the New York Herald Company were held by the Appellate Division to be mere obiter dicta and not controlling.

"A qualified privilege existed upon which the defendant properly relied in its report," it declared. "We think such publication was privileged, and by reason of such privilege the plaintiff cannot recover in the present action. There was no evidence of any actual malice on the part of the defendant."

WOOD AIDS NEW YORK PRESSMEN'S SCHOOL

President of Machinery Company Offers $500 Annual Prize and Gives Autoplate to Provide Incentive to Excel

Henry A. Wise Wood, president of the Wood Newspaper Machinery Company, has presented $500 for prize money and a pony autoplate machine to the pressmen's school conducted in New York jointly by the New York union and the publishers association under the auspices of the New York City Board of Education.

Announcement of the presentation was made this week by Andrew Armstrong, president of New York Printing Pressmen's Union Number 2. The first anniversary of the school was celebrated on Nov. 30 at a dinner, during which Fred A. Walker, managing director of the New York Evening Telegram, and chairman of the publishers association, remarked on the need of prize awards.

Mr. Wood wrote the following letter to Mr. Armstrong:

"I have ordered a Pony Autoplate Machine built for your school. This machine will cast the plates and completely finish and cool them, delivering them dry, ready for press. I have instructed our shops to get in touch with you concerning its installation.

"I am enclosing herewith my personal check for $500, covering such prize or prizes as it seems wisest to you to award those who shall have done the best work in your school during the current year. This, I hope, will do something towards creating the incentive to excel which last night Mr. Walker thought to be lacking. You may consider this prize as one to be given annually by me."

About 200 attended the school's anniversary dinner. Maj. George L. Berry, president of the International Printing Pressmen's and Assistant's Union of North America was the chief speaker.

Four new members were elected to the international union: Florence D. White, general manager, and J. F. Bresnahan, business manager, New York World; W. H. Field, general manager of the New York Daily News; Howard Davis, business manager of the New York Herald Tribune, and Mr. Walker, New York Evening Telegram.

JOURNALISM TEACHERS TO HEAR WHAT EDITORS EXPECT FROM THEM

Erie Hopwood, A. S. N. E. President, to Address Their Annual Convention in Columbus, December 29-31—Other Speakers Named

THE program for the annual three-day convention of the American Association of Teachers of Journalism, which will be held in Columbus, O., Dec. 29-31, has been made public by Prof. M. G. Osborn of Louisiana State University, president of the Association.

One feature will be a discussion of "What the American Society of Newspaper Editors Expects of Teachers of Journalism," by Erie C. Hopwood, editor of the Cleveland Plain Dealer and president of the newspaper editors' organization.

David Lawrence, president of the Consolidated Press Association, Washington, D. C., and publisher of the United States Daily, is scheduled to speak at the dinner which will close the sessions of Thursday, Dec. 30. For the first night, Dec. 29, informal discussions in the lounge of the Faculty Club are listed, with William A. Ireland of the Columbus Dispatch and Robert O. Ryder of the Ohio State Journal taking part.

The question of journalistic fraternities, which has been a point of debate in the last two conventions, will be brought up again in a talk on "What Sigma Delta Chi Expects of Teachers of Journalism," by Roy L. French of the University of North Dakota, national president of Sigma Delta Chi. Discussions in previous conventions have been largely from the standpoint of the teachers.

Objections raised have centered around what has been termed unnecessary expense for the students, and distraction from their studies. This will be the first time the association has listened to a formal presentation of the fraternities' side by the head of one of them.

The teachers' convention will be preceded on Dec. 28 by a convention of the Association of American Schools and Departments of Journalism, which will also be held in Columbus under the auspices of the Department of Journalism of the Ohio State University. This association is made up of nearly a score of institutions which meet the requirements laid down as to size and experience of teaching staff, quality and amount of training given to journalism students, and the organization of the work. Five or six applications for membership will be brought up this year.

The president of this association, commonly called the A. A. S. D. J., is J. S. Myers of Ohio State University. He is in charge of local arrangements for both conventions. Delegates will be housed in Mack Hall, a student dormitory, and all sessions will be held on the Ohio State University campus.

The three-day program of the teachers' association, according to President Osborn, "represents a compromise between the wishes of the teachers, mainly in the smaller schools, who asked that methods of teaching the various courses in journalism be stressed, and the suggestions of those who wanted emphasis on graduate work and research study in journalism." Accordingly, the first two morning sessions are given largely to teaching methods, while the last day is devoted almost wholly to research work and graduate study.

Publishing Company's Earnings Disclosed with Sale of 10,000 Shares

An idea of the earnings of the Curtis Publishing Company, owners and publishers of the Saturday Evening Post, the Ladies' Home Journal and the Country Gentleman, was obtained this week in the public announcement by a group of banking houses of the sale of 10,000 shares of Curtis Publishing Company $7 cumulative dividend preferred stock.

Net earnings for the first six months of this year, it was announced, totalled $8,173,277, after depreciation and taxes. For the year ended Dec. 31, 1924, the earnings, after depreciation and taxes, were $14,714,819 and for 1925 the earnings were $16,040,515, "or nearly $10,000,000 in excess of preferred dividend requirements."

It was announced that the company has no funded or other debt except current monthly accounts and among its current assets on June 30, 1926, was more than $25,000,000 in cash, United States Government bonds and other investments, including parcels of real estate in various parts of Philadelphia. The common stock of the company, at current market prices, is said to have a market value of more than $160,000,000. There are now outstanding 900,000 shares of $7 cumulative dividend preferred stock, without par value, and 900,000 shares of common stock, without par value. The 10,000 shares offered by the bankers and quickly absorbed, were sold at a rate of $116.50 a share.

COMPILING RATE CLAIMS

S. N. P. A. Asks Members for List for Study Purposes

Southern publishers have been requested by the Southern Newspaper Publishers Association to compile a list of claims they have filed against the railroads during the past year for damages to newsprint paper.

A letter requesting this information has been sent out from S. N. P. A. headquarters at Chattanooga, Tenn., by Manager Cranston Williams.

As soon as the information has been received it will be compiled so that a general study of the situation may be made.

PREPARING COST BLANKS

The cost findings and surveys committee of the Inland Daily Press Association is preparing cost finding blanks for each one of its 243 members to report on 1926 business after the close of the year. The cost survey will be made in units of dollars and cents instead of percentages as heretofore.

MAILERS ASK INJUNCTION AGAINST I.T.U. CHANGES IN GOVERNMENT

Amendments Urged by President Howard Would Deprive 3000 Mailers of Voice in Council and Handling of Funds, It Is Charged

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Dec. 8.—A suit to enjoin Charles P. Howard, president of the International Typographical Union and other members of the Executive Council of the organization from carrying on an alleged conspiracy to exclude the Mailers Trade District Union from the organization, thus gaining control of $2,000,000 in assessments and dues, was filed yesterday by James P. McNichols and other officers of the Mailers Union in Federal Court here.

CHARLES P. HOWARD

McNichols charges in the suit that Howard has written letters to printer members of the International Typographical Union urging amendments to the constitution that would segregate the Mailers District Trade Union and deprive it of participation in management of affairs of the Typographical Union. According to the complaint the letters are being sent only to printer members of the Union, the Mailers being avoided.

Control of $2,000,000 paid in during the last fifteen years by the 3,000 members of the Mailers Union for various benefits and now in the care of John W. Hays, secretary-treasurer of the International Typographical Union, is at stake, it is charged. The money, it is said, is invested in Liberty bonds at the Fletcher American National Bank in Indianapolis.

Other members of the Executive Council of the typographical union, installed recently, are Seth R. Brown, vice-president; Austin Hewson, vice-president, and Charles N. Smith, vice-president.

Other complainants in the suit are Walter J. Weissmann of Cincinnati, O., James F. Carr of Toledo, O., Frank Raubinger of San Francisco, Cal., Otto Lepp of Milwaukee, Wis., and Munro Roberts of St. Louis, Mo.

The amendments which Howard is charged with urging provide that the mailers' branch shall elect a third vice-president to represent them on the executive council. McNichols declares this would deprive the mailers' branch of its right of franchise in the management of the Typographical Union as a whole. The questionnaires which Howard is sending to all local unions of the Typographical Union are so worded that no opportunity is afforded for negative replies, it is charged.

The amendments are in violation of the constitution in as much as they classify who shall have the right to vote, the complaint sets forth. All smaller unions formerly attached to the Typographical Union have been eliminated until the mailers' branch is the only one left, it was asserted. If the mailers' branch is eliminated, its members will be deprived of mortuary and other benefits, McNichols declared.

Since the printers control the union by their 70,000 members as opposed to the 3,000 members of the mailers' branch, the only recourse of the latter is through an injunction to prevent adoption of the amendments, McNichols asserts. The suit asks that a trust be formed in favor of the mailers' union.

RUMANIA OSTRICH LIKE IN REGARD TO NEWS

"Bantam Kingdom" Seeks to Suppress All News of State Affairs, N. Y. Times Man Writes—Attempt Fails

Rumania's "ostrich-like attitude" on press censorship was described by Lincoln Eyre, correspondent of the New York Times in a dispatch filed from Budapest, Dec. 6. Writing of Queen Marie's return to Bucharest, he declared she made every effort to keep her arrival secret from the American press representatives, not wishing them to witness the "lifeless colorless character of her homecoming." He continued:

"The Queen's attitude, in which she was strongly seconded by the Rumanian Government, is strikingly characteristic of Rumania's fear of being compared with other nations to her own detriment. The Rumanians are forever emulating the ostrich. Their grotesque attempts at camouflaging their political, social and economic body by sticking its head in the sand and have become a national vice. They utterly fail to understand that their secretive behavior confuses rather than conceals, and harms more than it helps abroad. It leads inevitably to the question, What is the matter with Rumania?"

"An answer in some detail seems worth while today, since the presence at Bucharest of sixteen American correspondents, photographers and movie men implies quite an extraordinary interest overseas in the affairs of this bantam kingdom. It seems opportune, moreover, to file the dispatch that follows here in Budapest so that no doubt may exist of its complete freedom from censorious supervision.

"The most dangerous factor in Rumania's complex is the censorship. Until the recent influx of American newspaper men it was also the Rumanian Government's most carefully guarded secret. The censor's first duty was to smother all information about the censorship.

To get around this subterranean suppression of news the Americans were obliged from the start to controvert Rumanian officialdom's bland denial that there was any control whatever over press messages abroad. For the first time in the history of American journalism they demanded an open, recognized censorship—a strangely anomalous demand, but one imperatively motivated by the secret stifling of their dispatches. Through a collective appeal direct to the Minister for Foreign Affairs the correspondents succeeded in getting an official "supervisor" of news matter appointed whose decisions should be absolute and final.

"The functionary assigned to this thankless job happens to be a most intelligent and amiable young Transylvanian, thoroughly familiar with the English language and the United States. He has stricken little or nothing out of the press messages laid before him. Probably he would pass this dispatch undeleted, but to allay all suspicion that its text has been tampered with it has been carried unread across the frontier and put on the wire here.

"The writer spent a week at Bucharest and came into daily contact with the censorship. He is able to affirm that in that time no salient facts about the situation there were suppressed. But so long as the Rumanian Government censors news the menace of distortion exists—and with it the danger of Rumania finding herself lied about and defamed abroad.

"This obvious truth escapes the Bucharest authorities altogether.

"They are much annoyed over the journalistic invasion resulting from their efforts a fortnight ago to bottle up within their borders all information about their King's illness and the political upheaval threatened by his death. In their eyes the visiting scribes resemble a plague of seventeen-year locusts, which they would gladly rid themselves of it if they only dared.

"The chief object of concealment was the gravity of King Ferdinand's ailment. Bucharest was doing its best to hide the inherently fatal nature of his malady and the imminent danger of his death at a time when in the United States Queen Marie was broadcasting the necessity of her immediate departure homeward lest the king die before she reached his bedside.

"Why so much camouflage about an apparently innocuous and inevitable occurrence? Because the Rumanian Government heard that the approach of the sovereign's demise would stir the supporters of his exiled eldest son, who a year ago renounced his right of succession to the throne, to stage a coup d'état on his behalf."

NEW YORK CHICAGO DETROIT BOSTON PHILADELPHIA

“A CITY FORTUNATE IN ITS PRESS” and THE NEW YORK TIMES is FIRST

*I*N A SURVEY of New York newspapers The New Yorker, the recently established and highly successful weekly journal of the metropolis, says of The New York Times:

No one, inside or outside the newspaper business, will challenge the right of THE TIMES to be named first in any consideration of the metropolitan press.

It has not the largest circulation, nor does it lead in volume of advertising in all classifications. It has, however, in thirty years under its present ownership brought together one of the largest homogeneous groups of intelligent, well-to-do and responsive readers ever won by any newspaper.

Its first function, it conceives, is news-giving. Features, opinions, even orders for advertising, must give way before the pressure of the day's events.

No mere parochial or insular standard of news suits THE TIMES. It takes the world for its district. And not only the visible world, but the invisible, for the researches of science into the unknown are reported as thoroughly and competently as are the murders in Mott Street or the mysterious policy of China. Explorer and archaeologist, chemist and astronomer, bacteriologist and engineer—all have learned to rely upon THE TIMES to inform the layman of their discoveries, and to tell them what their fellows are doing—always accurately, with restraint and respect for scholarly truth. THE TIMES is an essential tool to the business man, a public document to the statesman, a contemporary record to the historian, a reference bulletin to the shipper, the lawyer, the realtor, the financier, an inspiration to the educator, and to all other newspaper men an unfailing source and worthy model.

Hails Its “Clarity and Vigor”

Foresight, energy and enterprise have enabled it to tap every spring of news in the entire world. Its men range far with assignments which are definite and yet leave play for individual initiative and talent. Skill and decency in training and handling men have equipped it to present the news with clarity and vigor. Courage in the use of space, lavishness, at times, but always governed by a fit sense of proportion, have made it notable for thoroughness and balance, each story being stressed for what it is worth, no more, no less. The human race has never had a newspaper so comprehensive.

Little wonder, then, that THE TIMES has a daily circulation of the highest intellectual quality, rising to 360,000 on weekdays and 600,000 on Sundays. Little wonder, too, that it enjoys an advertising prestige that is international.

No advertising campaign is properly built in New York unless THE TIMES has at least been given thorough consideration. There are many campaigns in which it is not a primary medium, but if it is not used, the reason for not using it ought to be positive. The burden of proof is not on THE TIMES; it is on the advertiser.

SANTA CLAUS' ARRIVAL STIRS ST. PAUL

Dispatch and Pioneer Press Establish His Headquarters in Local Park—2,000 Letters from Children Daily

Two thousand letters a day from interested children in St. Paul and the Northwest and 1,500 children and grown-ups per hour greeting the official Santa Claus as set up by the St. Paul Dispatch and Pioneer Press, are the statistics to date on how well the 1926 Yuletide is going over in the "Christmas City."

The gentleman from Alaska arrived the day following Thanksgiving. He set up headquarters in Rice Park, where daily he has held receptions for young and old. To date he has greeted upwards of 20,000 believers and unbelievers, many of them taking advantage of the reduced railroad rates and coming from points in excess of 500 miles.

The arrival of St. Nick was the signal for the city and the merchants to decorate the streets and stores which, this year, was an accomplished fact about two weeks in advance of other years. Early Christmas shopping has been stimulated to a marked degree by the Santa Claus idea, the department stores reporting a heavy increase in business. One of the largest of these broke its one-day sales record and did it on a Tuesday.

PAINLESS CUTTING OF OPERATING COSTS

the prime characteristic of the bulk of it. Most of the food product "features" submitted for the women's page have neither originality nor merit to distinguish them. They fill space at the cost of a stereotype plate and save the cost of a syndicate feature or a local writer's salary. And they rob the publisher by making him give what he should sell, as well as tainting his news columns. If the publisher is getting ready to shorten sail and lighten ship, the press agent is the first to be thrown to the sharks.

Another activity of comparatively recent origin which should be closely examined before getting a place on the budget is the merchandising service department. Undoubtedly many of these organizations have made an important place for themselves in their respective newspaper structures. They have cost much, but they have returned an excellent profit on the investment in the form of new local and foreign accounts. Others look like the genuine article, but their competitors tell strange tales of a $5,000 account obtained by the promise and execution of service to the advertiser which could not be rendered for much less than the amount of the contract. Newspaper men also tell of fantastic and unbelievable requests for service from advertising agencies for unnamed accounts which are never subsequently identified on the foreign advertising ledgers. The publisher who retains his merchandising service department for better or worse might make a 1927 resolution to "debunk" it and to limit its activities to the business of advertisers whose lineage goes into his columns.

Free cut and copy service to advertisers is an evil which remains from the olden days in a number of cities, and which offers a tempting salient to publishers who want to save money.

And don't forget the rate-card!

It is a powder-keg in the finest of times, but to attempt adjustment on a falling market is almost comparable to juggling nitro-glycerine. When collections are tight and credit is short, the business man needs advertising more than he ever needed it in days of free spending, but the job of selling him regular space is difficult enough without the complication of selling a higher rate card. If there are still soft spots on the rate schedule, the time to fix them is before any retrograde movement in business becomes general. The moment may be right now to sell an adjustable card, in which the tariff varies both as to the amount of space used and as to the circulation offered by the publisher. The South Bend News-Times, one of the first users of this style card, reports uninterrupted success in its use, as do newspapers in New York and other cities which have somewhat similar methods.

Turning to the circulation department, give a thought to returns. Largely eliminated during the war period, they have crept back to a corner of their old hold on many newspapers. Possibly some new readers have been won by the more liberal distribution afforded by a return policy, but one wonders whether the same results might not have been achieved by using the money cost of the extra papers in improving the paper itself. Like the free publicity parasite, returns arrive in days of prosperity and the temptation is to employ them as a stimulant when business lags. Unlimited or liberal returns have no place in efficient management, in the opinion of successful newspaper men.

Every copy produced in the ordinary American newspaper plant costs the publisher considerably more than he receives for it, the direct gain from returns is minus, the indirect gain doubtful. Another aspect of circulation management to be closely scanned is the predate edition policy, which has been much discussed in recent weeks. The question is wholly in the debatable realm and no general verdict can be given at this time as to whether the predate is an economic evil or an exercise of the newspaper's true function of disseminating its information as widely as possible. A Sunday predate, however, printed four or six days before date of publication seems hardly a legitimate daily newspaper activity; its production and distribution cost and its possibilities as a revenue producer deserve the closest examination by the committee.

Operation of trucks is a comparatively new business for most publishers and it not to be doubted that a good many pennies can be saved by close checking of mileage against fuel and oil cost, maintenance and tires, and loads carried. Brisbane, writing of the great fleet of trucks operated by the Hearst newspapers in New York, declared that they are sent out with the springs bent down to the axles. Those trucks earn their way. Do yours?

As has been said and repeated, the editorial department is no longer the place for the publisher to save a large sum of money in one giant cut, but that does not mean that the editorial men are entirely immune from the inspection of the budgeters. Joseph Pulitzer is quoted by one of his former secretaries as declaring that the overproofs would often make a better newspaper than the day's issue. Much to substantiate this dictum can be found today, when the copy-desk is given 30 or 40 per cent of the paper to fill and the choice of two, three, or four news services besides local and feature copy to fill it with. Much good copy for which wire tolls have been paid goes on the floor or to the reserve galleys in the composing room, perhaps never to see itself in print.

That is inevitable, but it is watched in well-managed newspaper offices, where the head of the desk hears from Authority in a loud voice after a two or three-day period of heavy oversight.

Overhead telegraph and telephone tolls are another crevice through which dollars pour unwatched and unsuspected. Much of this waste is also inherent in the business of gathering news, but it has been reduced by alert managing editors and men on the state desk who know how to handle correspondents unversed in city newspaper ways.

Upon the editorial department, of course, rests the main responsibility for repulsing the space-grafting press agent, who now and then is one of their own number, out to increase his weekly income from the newspaper by a little acceleration of public opinion.

The editorial department can also help the composing room save a useful dollar or two by furnishing copy clean and as nearly as possible free from errors that have to be corrected after the pages have passed through the foundry to the press-room. Few publishers know for their own papers the amount of money needlessly wasted in replating for typographical errors, but the amount in the aggregate must be appalling.

Every assistance given to the compositors which cuts down the possibility of errors is money in the profit column. Good lighting on machine keyboards and assembling mechanism, clean matrices and space-bands, a conscientious and competent machinist, plenty of light and air, comfortable working chairs, convenient drinking water and wash-room facilities—all of these characterize the regime of the publisher who believes that a moment saved or an extra line produced in the machine alley is so much velvet.

The best of metal is not too good for the newspaper; composing machine and stereotype metal is worth many thousands of dollars in most plants, yet it is often treated as hardly more than junk. It is melted and recast by a boy or a laborer incapable of understanding its importance in many a shop. The typesetters can tell the publisher what in-attention to metal means when translated into terms of "squirts" whose removal takes the time needed to set a column of minion. The stereotyper knows the trouble and cost of a page the spongy slugs of which collapse under the matrix-press. Good type-metal at times may be worth its weight in gold.

The press-room has its wastes, too, though they are by no means as important as they were before the war showed publishers what havoc could be wrought by unwatched white and printed waste. As a rule, the personnel of the press-room force, as well as those in the composing room and stereotype department, are efficient workmen, easily interested in doing their jobs better and ending unnecessary waste.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER has heard countless stories from publishers of the loyal co-operation given freely by their mechanical forces in time of stress. Though ideas for improvement often come from them unsolicited, it may be said that their rank and file looks for such leadership to the management, represented by the foreman.

And before the budget board completes its business, it might look over the stock-room shelves. Possibly it will find stationery in a dozen different sizes, shapes, and shades on all kinds of stock up to the most expensive bond. Some of it may date back for years, a monument to an idea which promised results but was abandoned before the results appeared. It will possibly find an equal multiplicity of envelopes, also report blanks for every department, some of them unbelievably crude and unworkable. A few hours' attention to the job-printing question may save several hundred dollars in this little-visited and usually forgotten corner of the shop.

Happy, indeed, is the publisher whose shop needs attention in none of these situations. His business in its major affairs no doubt reflects equal fidelity and care. He can view with a calm mind the dreary predictions of business stress, secure in the knowledge that so far as the business sun is concerned, he is situated on the Equator.

Is There a Newspaper Not Convinced of the Intrinsic Value of Premiums?

If so, they are not the newspapers that have USED premiums.

Can any periodical suffer the procuring of new subscribers by giving pleasure and diversion to the children of their patrons?

Can any newspaper invite other than co-operation from the inhabitants of its territory by an investment in good will?

For years wise newspaper men have found the awarding of premiums of incalculable value.

Many thoughtful circulation and business managers use premiums as a reward for Others use them as a reward for the solution of puzzles for little ones who thus are taught to love the children's columns of their newspapers.

ALL wise newspapers use them in some manner, for, as we have implied above, while Fear may be the beginning of Wisdom, the enlistment of Good Will is the consummation of Wisdom.

Kango, our most popular toy, will be an incomparable aid to you in becoming beneficially wise. Its use by representative newspapers proves this.

FROM SCRATCH TO $1,000 A DAY IN 3 MONTHS, TOLD

100 DEALERS SECURED BY ONE AD IN LOS ANGELES EXAMINER

L. A. EXAMINER IS ONLY PAPER USED

On August 1, 1926, there was no such thing as a Ready-Cut House Department of the Bettingen Lumber Company of Los Angeles! Three months later, on November 1st, the Bettingen Ready-Cut Homes Company was doing a business of $1,000 a day!

In between those dates is an interesting advertising story.

"Shall we try the ready-cut home field?" was the question that the officers of the long-established lumber company asked themselves.

"Let's find out by running a test advertisement in The Los Angeles Examiner," suggested Sylvester Hoffman, general sales manager.

So a 16-inch advertisement appeared on August 1, in The Examiner. It drew 65 mail inquiries and innumerable personal calls, but the management had nothing to sell, not even literature to hand out. The purpose had been to find out how hard and in what direction the wind was blowing.

As a result of that advertisement, thousands of dollars worth of machinery was installed, literature was prepared, and the company got ready to get its share. The first advertisement for actual business brought 72 mail replies from all over California, and from Arizona, Nevada and Utah, into all of which territories the company ships.

A $6,500 house was sent to San Diego as a direct result of that insertion, an agent was appointed there, and two more houses shipped to him almost immediately. The Examiner advertisements have found seven high-grade representatives for the company, while advertisements seeking representatives only and appearing in 35 small papers in this territory brought but one reply, and that not the type that was sought.

Today the business expands by leaps and bounds, and still The Examiner and its Sunday building pages are used exclusively.

"We expect to be doing $2,000 a day within a couple of more weeks," said Hoffman a few days ago.

Los Angeles Is Richest County

The people of Los Angeles County have more money to spend than those of any other county in America, and that means of any similarly large group of people anywhere in the world!

Such are the findings, recently released, of H. G. Weaver, whose analytical report of county purchasing power throughout the United States, as made for the General Motors Corporation, won the $2,000 Harvard Award for Scientific Research in Advertising, last year.

Weaver's analysis was one of the most exhaustive ever undertaken to uncover definitely the development of a basic purchasing power by counties.

An indication of the great disparity existing throughout the nation was seen in the fact that in one Mississippi County the purchasing power was found to be only $123 per person per year. In Los Angeles County, the figure reached the high mark of $1,107.

"This . . . emphasizes the economic necessity for a careful discrimination between markets," commented Weaver, in his report.

Sunshine of Prosperity Shining in L. A.

Port Records, Building Permits, Telephones, Retail Business, Show Unprecedented Activity in Southwest Metropolis

If coming events truly cast their shadows before, 1927 is destined to be the most prosperous year that Los Angeles has ever known, and this in face of the fact that throughout several years she has stood forth as the most favored city in the world in material wealth.

Conceded by the U. S. Shipping Board as the world's third largest harbor in 1925, with a total tonnage of 18,047,629, a new record was set during October just past, when every port activity of Los Angeles showed an upward trend. Foreign imports and exports set a new high record, and cargoes to the East Coast were the biggest in the harbor's history.

Building permits for the first ten months of 1926, show a total of $104,228,098, the report of the city's building department reveals. Of this sum, $56,994,823, or considerably better than half the total, went into the erection of new homes in Los Angeles' residential areas.

During 1927, the city engineer estimates, public improvements in the form of street work will total $24,000,000.

Recently, the 300,000th telephone was connected in Los Angeles, making that city one of five in the United States with that many, or more, telephone subscribers. The others are New York, Chicago, Boston and Philadelphia.

A report submitted a few days ago by Clinton E. Miller, regional vice-president of the California Development Association, showed that average conditions of general business in Southern California are 19.6 per cent above normal. On top of Miller's report came one from Seward C. Simons, manager of the domestic trade department of the Chamber of Commerce, that showed that the average annual family-expenditure for retail purchases in Los Angeles is $2,057.

The Power of a Newspaper—

"The power of a newspaper depends not only upon the number of its readers, but upon the confidence its readers repose in it. That confidence is earned by intelligent and unselfish service—by a long record of effort for the public good as the editor sees it."

OFFICE SWAMPED BY CASH ORDERS

"Ding how!" exclaimed Liu, 8½-foot Chinese giant, when he recently took a ride in Los Angeles in a coach car.

It was the first time the gigantic former bodyguard to the late Emperor of China had ever been able to squeeze comfortably into an automobile.

Ding how, in Liu's tongue, means "Very, very good!" and the manufacturers of the new Universal Coach Seat Adjuster, whose appliance made possible the huge Chinaman's ride, are echoing his sentiments, following their advertising experience with The Los Angeles Examiner.

Langley & McFaul, who brought out the adjuster, used space in two Los Angeles newspapers to introduce their appliance. Here's what they write, of the results that followed:

"When one advertisement brings 100 dealers and swamps an office with orders, we are inclined to believe, in this concern, that somebody ought to be congratulated. A check-up of results makes it look like that party is the Los Angeles Examiner and its Sunday Automotive Section.

"On Sunday, October 3, we inserted a 16-inch advertisement in your automobile pages, announcing Universal Coach Seat Adjusters. While conceding that the product was one the motoring public has been looking for, for a long time, we had no expectation of being deluged with such a demand.

"But that single insertion drew cash customers from as far north as San Jose and as far south as Phoenix, Ariz. One man walked into the office eleven days after the advertisement appeared, with an Examiner clipping in his hand, and ordered a set. We were able to trace the sale of 500 sets directly to the Examiner, which outpulled the other mediums we used, 10 to 1.

"As a direct result of this, we are increasing our space in your publication, and shall henceforth concentrate in its columns, as they have proven themselves overwhelmingly powerful in pull.

"Cordially yours,
"LANGLEY & McFAUL.

Court Holds Newspapers and Public Entitled to Protection from Dishonest Classified Advertisers—How Want-Ads Filled Niles, O. Church—Christmas Tips

MAGISTRATE GEORGE W. SIMPSON, in Jefferson Market Court, New York, this week, held that newspapers and the public were entitled to protection from dishonest advertisers, when Emanuel Garden was arraigned before him on a serious charged preferred by a Brooklyn girl.

Garden's bail, first fixed at $2,500 when he was arraigned in Night Court Tuesday, was raised by Magistrate Simpson to $10,000 and then reduced by half at a later hearing.

The girl charged Garden with an attack when she visited his shop last Monday in answer to an advertisement in the World of that date.

In making his plea for a reduction in bail, Attorney Wlodaver, said:

"If the New York World or any newspaper comes into this court because an advertisement was put into their paper and something shall happen as a result of it, and then pick up the dirt so as to show that their newspaper does not intend to advertise falsely, why prosecute my client to vindicate their paper? That is not prosecution; it's persecution."

By way of reply to the defense counsel Magistrate Simpson made the following statement:

"I say this, counsel, that if a man such as your client advertises in the columns of a clean paper such as I have known the New York World to be for over thirty years, that he wants somebody in his office, and pursuant to the advertisement in this clean paper, which advertisement decent people can rely to secure positions that will give them a chance to earn a livelihood, and he uses the columns of this clean, decent paper, founded by Joseph Pulitzer, in the interests of the public, for a high and lofty purpose to secure a girl for the purpose (as charged), he is doing something that not alone hurts the other decent advertisers in the paper, but hurts the person who answers the advertisement, because she believes that the paper would not accept an advertisement unless it came from a good and decent, honorable man who wants an employee for honorable purposes. So far as the paper is concerned, it is entitled to be protected against this kind of advertiser because thousands—hundreds of thousands—rely on the paper as accepting only such advertisements as come from men of high character and integrity who want to honestly employ decent people for the purpose of earning a livelihood.

"Now, he did insert, it appears before me, an advertisement, and this girl went there in pursuance thereof. She did not go there of her own accord, but she went there because she relied upon an advertisement in a decent, honorable journal—a high-class journal in this community—and thereafter she answered the advertisement put in at his instance and request. After she answered that advertisement this thing, she says, happened to her.

"So, I say, I am here to protect not alone the person injured—if she has been injured—I don't know if she has, but she swears that she has in this affidavit, the policewoman says she has and she has investigated the facts very thoroughly, I think—but I am here, also, to protect the people who rely on advertisements and the leading newspapers in the city and State who publish the ads, not because of their monetary value, but in the interest of people who seek employment and try to make their living. Therefore, I have in mind both the interest of the complainant as well as the interest of the public, and my object is to protect the public and to protect those who advertise in this and other newspapers in the community.

"You know the power of the press, which is unlimited to protect those who answer its advertisements against injustice, wrong and personal injury, and I have in mind their rights to answer and to go to places such as this in answer to a publication of an advertisement in a leading paper, founded in the interest of public service."

Want ads recently run in the classified columns of the Niles (Mich.) Daily Star by O. R. Gratton, Methodist minister in the town, were responsible for filling up his church, according to David S. Bennett, advertising manager of the paper. Extracts from three of them follow:

"REPRESENTATIVE to conduct world-wide campaign for community betterment enterprise. Most improved methods. Applicants must be willing to work. Income on percentage basis. . . ."

"WANTED—150 HIGH SCHOOL people to engage in special activities. Highest remuneration paid. Part or full time. Advancement guaranteed to the right parties. Apply in person. . . ."

"AGE OLD CONCERN is offering preferred stock and common stock on open market. Has been doing business in Niles for many years. Positively safest investment. Largest dividends of any company in the world. You cannot lose."

C. M. Dailey, classified advertising manager of the Watertown (N. Y.) Daily Standard, is justly proud of the showing of the holiday classification in his paper, "Christmas Gift Suggestions."

The Standard issued, Dec. 4, nearly a complete page under this classification, which was neatly headed with holly border and Santa Claus heads.

The main heading was sub-divided into "Gifts for Him," "Gifts for Her," and "Gifts for the Home." At the top of column one the readers were reminded of the number of days left in which to shop.

The Christmas gift suggestion page of the Lancaster (Pa.) New Era, of which C. B. Dorsey is classified advertising manager, is run under the heading of "Shop-o-Scope." Mr. Dorsey said:

"The New Era has been using the Shop-o-Scope Christmas Gift Suggestions for the past four years. This year we opened the campaign with 310 ads the first day. The advertisers using the Shop-o-Scope comment very favorably upon the results from this method of Christmas advertising.

"One department store, before signing a contract for Shop-o-Scope ads, inquired from fifty customers entering their store whether they knew what the Shop-o-Scope was, and in every case they answered in the affirmative. They then signed the contract to use twenty or more ads each day during the Shop-o-Scope campaign."

As a further service to the users of its classified advertising columns, and to take care of growing patronage, the Minneapolis Tribune is completing extensive alterations for the opening, Jan. 1, of a "want ad arcade" on the ground floor of the adjoining building, known as the Tribune Annex.

Equipped with all the latest facilities for the handling of classified advertising, the arcade, built in the form of an "L," is accessible through main entrances on two streets, besides an entry to the lobby of the Tribune building proper. Its principal feature is a circular counter, 90 feet long and extending the entire length of the arcade. It will accommodate two-score customers at one time. A special lighting arrangement, designed by Hugo Miller, Tribune building superintendent, has been installed to make reading of agate lines easier.

A dozen wall desks, equipped with telephones and racks containing "want" blanks, have been installed for the convenience of patrons. The interior is finished with rubber tile floors and marble wainscoting.

P. M. Hughes is classified advertising manager.

R. E. Seiler, classified advertising director of the W. R. Hearst newspapers, left this week on a tour of inspection of Hearst papers in Syracuse, Detroit, Chicago, San Francisco, and Los Angeles. He is scheduled to return to New York about Feb. 1, 1927.

J. E. Smith, formerly assistant circulation manager of the Los Angeles Examiner, has joined the classified advertising department of the New York American.

Louis Doery has been appointed classified advertising manager of the North Side News, New York community paper. He formerly managed the classified department of the Bollettino della Sera, Italian language evening newspaper in New York.

CUMBERLAND TIMES CELEBRATES

Fifty-nine employees of all departments of the Cumberland (Md.) Evening and Sunday Times were guests of the publishers at a banquet Dec. 6, at the Fort Cumberland Hotel, in observance of the first anniversary of the Sunday edition of the Times. Joseph B. Finan, editor-manager, presided and Frank Lee Carl, city editor, was toastmaster. Representatives of all departments of the newspaper responded with brief talks.

FORESEES PROSPEROUS YEAR

Hard business competition, which will mean the mobilization of the best sales and advertising brains of the country, will be a feature of 1927, in the judgment of James H. Rand, Jr., president of the Rand-Kardex Bureau, Inc., expressed in a recent business prediction. He declared even the pessimist will grant there is "nothing in the business situation today or the 1927 prospects that would justify any slackening in advertising and selling."

Save Time With Certified Stereotyping

Eliminating steamtables thru the adoption of Certified Cold stereotyping means saving from 4 to 7 minutes in getting to press.

We hardly need emphasize what such a saving in time means to publishers.

But that is only one phase of economy of the Certified Dry Mat stereotyping process. There is the saving in newsprint, which alone, makes our process worthwhile; and there are other advantages.

And above all, with Certifications the printing is every whit as good as with wet mats.

THE HEARST

THE METROPOLITAN DRY

Mr. George E. Pancoast, Mechanical Advisor of the Hearst group of newspapers, is well known to newspaper publishers and mechanical men throughout the world. To him and to Mr. John Healy, Production Manager and outstanding expert in the stereotyping art, may be credited the exceptional excellence of the typography of the Hearst newspapers, especially in the reproduction of half tones.

Three years ago I happened to meet Mr. Pancoast in the plant of The Los Angeles Herald, and discussed with him the probable future of the dry mat process and what effect it would have in the manufacture of newspapers. He agreed that it would be far reaching but said there was, unfortunately, no dry mat that could then be used with satisfaction in the big plants.

The following year the METROPOLITAN dry mat was put to work by The Philadelphia Evening Bulletin, where it has made history by eliminating the last remaining crude and primitive operation in newspaper manufacture—the use of wet mat and steam table.

Since The Philadelphia Evening Bulletin installed the METROPOLITAN mat the following newspapers have decided to adopt it:

THE PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER	THE CHICAGO AMERICAN
THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS	THE CHICAGO HERALD & EXAMINER
THE NEW YORK AMERICAN	THE BALTIMORE SUN
THE NEW YORK JOURNAL	THE CLEVELAND NEWS
THE NEW YORK SUN	THE NEW YORK TELEGRAM
THE BOSTON AMERICAN	THE BOSTON ADVERTISER

Recalling our meeting in Los Angeles and our hopes there expressed, Mr. Pancoast has written me the letter herewith reproduced.

Of particular importance is the fact, Mr. Pancoast points out, that by adopting the Wood Dry Mat and increasing Autoplate facilities a reduction is made possible in the number of presses used. The publisher who believes he requires additional press capacity may find upon analysis that he, like Mr. Pancoast, can solve his production problems most easily and at far less cost in money and space by increasing his foundry instead of his pressroom.

Indeed, a publisher can usually recover the total cost of enlarging his foundry through the savings made possible in the reduction of the width of his paper rolls which the Wood Dry Mat makes possible.

BENJAMIN WOOD.

NEWSPAPERS

AT AND THE AUTOPLATE

New York American

Mr. Benjamin Wood, November 26, 1926.
Wood Flong Corporation,
501 Fifth Avenue,
New York City.

Dear Mr. Wood:

Congratulations. Your dry mats have been improved to the point where our production management considers them fit to tackle the major plants of the Hearst Service. They have been giving satisfactory performance for some time on many of our minor papers. The conditions on our New York papers are undoubtedly the toughest you will ever have to deal with.

In connection with use of your mats, I am calling the attention of our people to the fact that complete advantage of the most important feature of your product—SPEED—can only be realized by increasing the casting capacity of our plants to handle the mats furnished by the increased speed of the moulding. We cannot get plates from a bunch of mats tied up in the steam tables. If full advantage is taken of the speed of your moulding we should be able to cut off machines on the press end.

Hence we are figuring in our new plant on increasing our Autoplate equipment fifty per cent. over the present size. In this I have the hearty endorsement of Mr. John Healy, Production Manager of the New York papers, and general advisor to the entire service.

Sincerely yours,

GEO. E. PANCOAST,
Mechanical Supervisor.

LOQUACIOUS LAMP-POSTS

WASHINGTON correspondents, in these days of constant encroachment by officialdom upon the free press, need keep their wits about them. The political game of saddling responsibility for official utterance upon the newspapers of this country is not new, merely intensified. The Washington Correspondents' Corps does not seem inclined to kick back, there is apparently no public pressure to defend the ancient instrument of "our liberties," and all we can think of to recommend is individual vigilance.

The only novelty in the State Department's attempt to push the press associations and services into an unauthorized attack upon the friendly government of Mexico, to serve motives that are more real than apparent, is that it was found out and exposed. That sort of thing is going on every day in the relationships between government officials and newspaper men. EDITOR & PUBLISHER, time and again, has called the attention of the craft to the dangerous practice.

Our hope is that this abuse of newspapers by public officials who have not the courage to face the consequences of their own acts will over-reach itself and so arouse the public that news despatches that quote Pennsylvania Avenue lamp-posts on vital subjects that may even compound the poisons of war will become extremely unhealthy for all concerned.

H. F. Harrington suggested that school teachers tell pupils "what and what not to read in the newspapers," which leads us to suspect he has not studied the normal child's curiosity reactions.

GOOD NEW RULE

THE Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of the State of New York has just handed down an important decision bearing upon the question of privilege in publishing complaints filed with court clerks by litigants. In New York State and of states as well it has long been a question whether a newspaper did not run a libel risk by publishing allegations made in an unanswered complaint, although the document had been officially filed with the clerk of the court. Many libel suits have resulted from the use of such material.

It is now the unanimous opinion of the Appellate Division that when a complaint has been filed in the County Clerk's office a newspaper is privileged to make a fair and true report of it as a step in a judicial proceeding. This is the court's interpretation of the meaning of the Civil Practice Act and it responds to common sense. If the rule stands, sharper lawyers will have lost one club that they have never hesitated to use on newspapers when it was to their advantage to suppress unfavorable news concerning clients.

EDITOR & PUBLISHER congratulates the numerous publishers who have cut that blatant free advertising from radio programs.

THE JERSEY VERDICT

IT is to be supposed that there has been a deal of head-wagging in newspaperdom since the "twelve men and true" in Jersey delivered up their "not guilty" verdict last week. Does crusading pay? Was Philip Payne, of the Mirror, shown up as a charlatan merely seeking circulation at the expense of some small-town plutocrats, or was he a real champion of old-fashioned, fearless journalism? In cases like the Hall-Mills mystery should it not be the business of a newspaper to trail along behind the responsible authorities and take that which is privileged for publication and let justice lie where she falls? Why go out on the limb?

These are questions that have been asked, we dare say, in every newspaper office of the country.

Mr. Payne's methods in the Hall-Mills case were not always safe or, in our opinion, justifiable. We do not now refer to his effort to reopen and solve, in a court of law, that black mystery, which possessed elements raising it far above the plane of ordinary crime. With that enterprise, except for occasional evidences of putting Mirror circulation advantage above the public cause, we do not quarrel, and we assume that this editor's representations of disinterested public service were genuine. Our objection was to an atmosphere of partisan reporting in the Mirror itself, culminating in statements verging on charges against the defendants. Unless a newspaper man has seen a homicide committed he must not make charges, and good judgment, even in such circumstances, would demand corroboration.

There is no fear in love; but perfect love casteth out fear; because fear hath torment. He that feareth is not made perfect in love.—Revelation, IV; 18.

Aside from certain audacious melodramatics that Mr. Payne engaged in, our sympathies are with him. His campaign, we believe, was a sincere effort to vindicate the state in a case which had the appearance of sore neglect by the constituted legal authorities. Surely this editor lacked nothing in courage and it was a remarkable feat to draw indictments and trial in a case that was four years cold.

The circumstances of the trial were so peculiar that it is well-nigh impossible for persons not intimately familiar with the community and its code to form sound judgment. Certainly, soft measures would have been futile. The case demanded radical action. The jury's verdict is probably disheartening to Mr. Payne and those who believed with him that the prosecution of the defendants was an act in defense of democratic institutions. Broadly, we think, the principle that a newspaper is within its right to expose failures in government remains soundly intact. The Mirror might have gained great glory, regardless of the verdict, if its pages had always reflected soundly authenticated news as it developed and a grim, yet wholesome, policy to see justice done through a fair hearing in court. If the social soil was as Prosecutor Simpson described it in his summation, the fact belongs to the world and explains everything. The honor attaching to that significant revelation, if true, belongs to Mr. Payne, who, had he played a cooler game, might well be content with the achievement.

All eyes on the postal situation at Washington—the stubborn resistance of the Postmaster General now encounters Senator Moses, who is beginning to see the light. Postal rates at 1920 schedules should be had at this session of Congress.

MUSSOLINI'S GAG RULE

FIFTEEN years imprisonment is the punishment Mussolini, the former Socialist editor and freedom ranter of Milan, holds out for any newspaper man who disseminates abroad any "prejudiced" report or rumor about the internal affairs of the Italian state in such fashion as to hurt its prestige and credit.

Tottering thrones—what infamies have been committed in thy name!

Foreign correspondents in Rome, despite the Dictator's threats and his censor's slaughter of their copy, have managed to give to the world a fairly accurate picture of conditions within. The world knows that Mussolini's power is that of the sword. Nothing in his Regime seems so sacred as the profit system and great have been the sacrifices of what, many men believe, is finer coin. Experience through all modern history teaches us that government by force and secrecy runs to its own destruction. Hence, Mussolini's desperate attempts to create, by gag process, favorable opinion as to the credit of the state seems vain and futile. If he wishes to dramatize his gag rule just let him clap an American or English correspondent in his jail for from five to ten years for telling the truth about the Italian state. The Dictator will learn something about the international credit system from such an incident, we are here to assert.

JOURNALISM GRADUATES

CONSTANTLY recurring is the question whether graduates of journalism schools get ahead in the profession in which they have received special instruction and a book titled "Columbia Journalism Graduates," just published under the authorship of C. W. Steffler, offers a convincing answer.

More than 52 per cent of the graduates of the Columbia school are shown to be engaged in straight news occupations, on newspapers, syndicates or magazines. More than 2 per cent of the whole are full-time teachers of journalism and nearly 19 per cent are in callings such as advertising, publicity, printing and publishing, to which newspaper experience is a natural introduction. Nearly 7 per cent are women whose journalistic careers were short-circuited by marriage, 4 per cent are advanced students, 13 per cent are in non-journalistic occupations and 2.4 per cent are reported as unemployed.

The book throws new light on the earnings of journalism graduates. The annual pay of 126 men beginners was $1,365, compared with 2 beginners in non-journalistic occupations who averaged $2,050, and 5 graduates in semi-journalistic occupations who received an average of $1,945. Ten years out of school 8 men who followed journalism were averaging $6,210, 10 who were following semi-journalistic pursuits were averaging $9,358 and 5 who had taken up non-journalistic work were drawing average salaries of $9,038. Twelve years out of school 2 male graduates were found earning an average of $4,280 in journalism, 2 were averaging $13,800 in semi-journalistic work and 2 who were in pursuits outside of journalism were drawing the interesting annual pay of $30,000.

The beginner's pay for women graduates was found to be slightly less than for men and when women had been out of school eight years their average pay was from $2,600 to $800 per year less than men, the largest disparity being in the case of women following straight journalism.

Comparison was made with salary statistics in the fields of engineering and law. In the former the average beginner's pay was stated as $1,200, with $5,000 the average after 10 years in the profession. The city lawyer's average annual net return at the age of 35 was given as $5,000.

One of the interesting sidelights of Mr. Steffler's investigation is that only a few Columbia graduates have been lured away from professional standards to accept the pecuniary rewards of the peddlers of free publicity.

Copyreaders, don't pass "Xmas"!

UNABASHED

IN a display advertisement in a New York Sunday newspaper we notice the peculiar services that are offered to business executives, industrial corporations and progressive individuals by Klemfuss, Incorporated, a dealer in publicity. The advertiser offers "publicity, promotion and protection." Yes, that is what the copy said—protection! There is no explanation of that word. One may only imagine what it might mean.

However, Klemfuss blandly says: "If you have a product to sell—a project to promote—a personality to 'push'—put your problem up to us. We find or create an interesting angle to present to the public—through the news, in pictures or over the radio."

That such publicity, promotion or "protection" is done at the expense of the newspaper press, is inferred by this striking displayed line in the advertisement: "We are NOT an advertising agency."

Does this unabashed appeal for profitable business arouse any emotions among the weak-kneed editorial brotherhood that keeps press agency alive by printing the "news" offerings of such as Klemfuss, Incorporated?

"I want to buy some advertising space in your paper, not now, but some day, if I find that your readers are interested in my product, and to ascertain this I ask you to co-operate by running the enclosed little news item about my business," writes one of the famous old-time space grafters to a group of newspapers. Every woman knows that type of mind.

Central Press Association Reorganized—Dr. William E. Ritter Celebrates 70th Birthday—New Serial by Margaret Pedler Announced

SEVERAL recent important changes on the staff of the Central Press Association were announced this week by V. V. McNitt in New York.

The 70th birthday of Dr. William E. Ritter, president of Science Service, first director of the Scripps Institution for Biological Research, La Jolla, Cal., and professor emeritus of zoology at the University of California, was celebrated at a dinner given in his honor at the Cosmos Club, Washington, D. C., Dec. 3. Dr. Ritter was associated with the late E. W. Scripps, newspaper publisher, in the founding of the Scripps Institution for Biological Research and Science Service. At present he is directing research upon psycho-biology of babies at an experimental nursery school in California.

Gathered to honor Dr. Ritter were: Mrs. Ritter, Mr. and Mrs. Robert P. Scripps, Dr. and Mrs. Edwin E. Slosson, Dr. and Mrs. T. S. Palmer, Dr. Vernon Kellogg, Dr. J. C. Merriam, Dr. J. McKeen Cattell, Mr. and Mrs. Watson Davis, Dr. Frank Thone, James Stokley, and members of the staff of Science Service. RECORD CHANGES TYPE DRESS

Philadelphia Daily Discards "All Caps" Heads for Caps and L. C.

The Philadelphia Record, which heretofore had not changed its typographical makeup for many decades, last week discarded all of its "all caps" heads and substituted a new type dress, which is a bolder face set-up, caps and lower case. The reason given for the change is that it "makes for easier reading and brightens up the paper a bit."

Gordon H. Cilley, former advertising manager of the John Wanamaker Store, recently became managing editor of the Record and he it was who was responsible for the changed makeup, which has met with much favorable comment.

DINNER COMMITTEE NAMED

The committee to arrange for the annual dinner of the Bureau of Advertising of the American Newspaper Publishers Association was named this week as follows: Allison Stone, Providence Journal, chairman; Edwin S. Friendly, New York Sun; R. C. Holliss, New York Daily News; David B. Plum, Troy Record; William J. Pape, Waterbury (Conn.) Republican and American.

LONDON DAILY EXPOSES FAKE AUTOBIOGRAPHY

"Whispering Gallery" Withdrawn from Sale and Writer Arrested Following Daily Mail's Investigation

By ALLAN DELAFONS
(Special to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

LONDON, Nov. 29.—Reputed to be the work of a British diplomat of international fame, "The Whispering Gallery: Leaves from a Diplomat's Diary," aroused a furore when it was published in November by John Lane, the London publishing house, on account of the amazing statements attributed in it to various British politicians. The London Daily Mail refused to review the book in the ordinary way, and obtained complete denials of part of its contents from the statesmen referred to.

At first the publishers refuted the doubts cast on the authenticity of the book, maintaining that it had been placed in their hands by a well-known literary agent, who had stated that he was acting for a diplomat who refused to disclose his name. The charges of forgery still leveled against the book by the Daily Mail, however, at last drew from the agent, Hesketh Pearson, the admission that he had written the book himself.

A denial that he was the author was obtained from Sir Rennell Rodd, late British Ambassador in Italy, to whom authorship was attributed. The book was immediately withdrawn from circulation in England, and later the literary agent, Hesketh Pearson, was arrested and will be brought up for trial on a charge of obtaining money from the publisher by fraud and false pretences.

The Daily Mail has been the subject of congratulatory comments in other British newspapers for its public-spirited action.

Pathfinders

An Advertisement of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company

CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS discovered America, thus adding a new world to the old. Alexander Graham Bell discovered the telephone, giving the nations of the earth a new means of communication. Each ventured into the unknown and blazed the way for those who came after him.

The creating of a nation-wide telephone service, like the developing of a new world, opened new fields for the pathfinder and the pioneer. The telephone, as the modern of a multitude of things in the realms of research, engineering and business administration. Its continued advancement requires constant effort in working upon a never-ending succession of seemingly unsolvable problems.

American knows it, has been made possible by the doing

Because it leads the way in finding new pathways for telephone development, the Bell System is able to provide America with a nation-wide service that sets the standard for the world.

BUILDING NEWSPAPER CIRCULATION

How Decatur Herald Aims to Hold Rural Readers—Moving Picture Contest in Chicago—Pepping Up the Old Songs

BELIEVING that news is the world's best circulation builder, the Decatur (Ill.) Herald this month started publication of the Decatur Herald Jr., a four-page tabloid, designed for distribution among its country correspondents.

"The Herald serves a rich agricultural country through the center of Illinois, and much of our circulation is scattered through a belt approximately 125 miles long and 50 miles wide," Edward H. Weatherby declared in explaining the idea behind the new publication.

"To hold this circulation, we must give our rural readers news of their own localities, especially of the county seats of their counties.

"We have a staff of 125 country correspondents sending in news to us. Their monthly totals range from 4 or 5 inches to nearly 800 inches from Mattoon, a town of 15,000 near here. The total amount of correspondence printed per month is usually around 6,000 inches.

"To aid in securing better written correspondence and more faithful coverage, the Herald has decided to publish a monthly paper for correspondents, encouraging those who do good work and correcting impersonally mistakes which are made by a number of them.

"Practically all the material for the first issue has been written here at the office, but I am planning to make future numbers more truly representative of our correspondence, dividing my space between contributions from them, encouragement for them, and instruction.

"The first issue of the Junior attempts to follow as nearly as possible the make-up of the Herald proper. The type for the publication is set up in the Herald composing room, and the make-up and printing is done by the Herald Printing and Stationery Co., an associated organization."

The Chicago Daily News will award $500 in prizes to the authors of the best letters on the subject, "To Bob or Not to Bob." The contest is being run in connection with the showing of the latest photoplay of Mary Pickford, one of the few unshorn movie actresses. Contestants are asked to send letters to the Movie Editor of the Daily News giving their reasons why they did or did not bob their hair. The letters must be restricted to 150 words. The prizes are to be awarded as follows:

First prize, $100; second prize, $75; third prize, $50; fourth prize, $25, and 50 prizes of $5 each. In addition, the paper will award twenty-five passes, each admitting two persons to the theatre showing Miss Pickford's picture.

Motion pictures of the winners of the contest will be taken by the cameramen of the Daily News Screen Service.

The New York Daily Mirror sprays its readers with a regular machine gun fire of contests. Few weeks pass without a new contest. The latest was announced this week and is built around the idea of pepping up the old songs. Instructions to readers say to take the names of old songs and jazz them up with a wise-crack. Samples offered on the first day include: I wouldn't ask for A KISS IN THE DARK, until I'd seen you in daylight, WON'T YOU COME OVER TO MY HOUSE; MY WIFE'S GONE TO THE COUNTRY; and "WHERE'D YOU GET THOSE EYES; THEY DON'T MATCH." Five cash prizes beginning at $10 are being awarded daily.

C. B. McCauley has been appointed circulation manager of the Tulsa (Okla.) Tribune. Mr. McCauley was circulation manager of the Wichita Beacon for the last 18 years and for the last year and a half has been country circulation manager of the Oklahoma City Daily Oklahoma and Times. On the Tulsa Tribune he succeeds R. N. Orlopp, resigned to accept a position with the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Chicago—The Chicago Daily News will award $25 in prizes for the best letters submitted in a "Don't Get Gyped" contest, one of a series being run by the paper's Vocational Adviser. First prize will be $15; second prize $5; third prize, $2, and the fourth, fifth and sixth prizes, $1 each. Contestants are asked to tell of some experience on their jobs from which they would like to save others.

Under the auspices of the Worcester (Mass.) Evening Post circulation department, 55 carrier route boys, who were winners in a recent contest for new subscriptions, were taken on a tour of Boston, Concord, Lexington and the Charlestown Navy Yard Nov. 28. Two busses were chartered for the boys, and the trip was made under the direction of James T. Kelly, assistant circulation manager, with District Managers Israel Isenberg, Louis Kurzman and Walter Beaudoin.

August J. Fertig, publisher of the St. Louis Westliche Post is starting a novel idea of advertising his publication. He is running advertising copy in the German language in English daily newspapers in Missouri, Nebraska, and Iowa.

Last September the Westliche Post ran a campaign of advertising in newspapers in Nebraska and Iowa. The copy was in English.

CONSIDERING NEWSPAPER TAX

Officials of New South Wales Seeking $2,000,000 to Balance Budget

The Government of New South Wales is seriously considering a half-penny (one-cent) tax on all newspapers and other periodicals in an attempt to balance the budget. This information was contained in a letter to International News Service from H. K. Reynolds, manager of the London bureau.

"The proposed tax is estimated to yield 400,000 pounds sterling ($2,000,000), sufficient to balance the financial year," Mr. Reynolds wrote.

The London Daily Telegraph, calling the proposal a reversion to "the bad old days of the newspaper tax in a desperate attempt to balance the budget," said:

"This impost, if carried, will hit every section of the community, especially country readers, as the newspapers obviously will pass on the tax. As the daily and Sunday newspapers in Sydney alone have a combined weekly circulation of 5,000,000, a profitable source of taxation is indicated.

"Mr. Lang, Premier and treasurer of New South Wales, revealed a deficit of 1,250,000 pounds and an accumulated deficit of 4,705,000 pounds. Ordinary Government expenditure has doubled in the last eight years.

"In addition to the publication tax, Mr. Lang proposes increases of revenue by including in the current year's figures the income tax, 1,500,000 pounds, which would normally be collected next year; increased railway freights, 500,000 pounds; and diversion of motor taxation, 500,000 pounds, which had previously been specially allocated to main roads."

TO REGULATE BILLBOARDS

British County Councils Considering New Publicity Law

(Special to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

LONDON, Nov. 29.—British County Councils are to be recommended to adopt a new by-law to regulate the exhibition of advertisement hoardings and other forms of outdoor publicity, by the Scapa Society and the executive committee of the County Councils Association.

This by-law will prohibit the exhibition of any advertisement that injuriously affects the amenities of a public park or pleasure promenade, disfigures the natural beauty of a landscape, a view of rural scenery from a road or railway or disfigures the amenities of any village or historical building.

Certain exemptions are made in the case of advertisements relating to the land on which they stand, and to advertisements on railway buildings, and there is a five-years' grace allowed for any hoarding in existence.

The County Councils are empowered to make and enforce such regulations under the Advertisement Regulations Act.

After several years of investigation and experimentation, the Mergenthaler Linotype Company announces the introduction of a new newspaper body type. The new Ionic is an exception to the rule. The openness of the face, the height of the letters, the lower case—the clear, crisp, and fullness of the figures—the absence of marked contrast between thick and thin strokes—the well-fitted units—the minimum letter count—all of these things make this new type a most desirable newspaper face. There are no "pin" or sharp corners to fill up with irregular lines to break down in stereotyping. The even color of the characters is fully adapted to the "rough" nature of newspaper stock. The outstanding feature of the new face is its conservation of space. The even tone throughout is resting to the eyes without being monotonous. It is an excellent medium to avoid the "tired" look of the old type. A happy medium has been effected. It is easier to read than seven point faces, yet gives the same word-count to the column as six point. Various degrees of leading can be used to advance or the lines may be cast on a solid six and a half point body. The comparison shows that over the seven point faces. The first paper to adopt the new face was the Evening News of Newark, N. J. After a trial of several weeks, the management of the paper were enthusiastic. They never about it, and readers began to send in words of praise. One of the most ardent readers, Dr. Joseph H. Salov, a leading optometrist, and past president of the Jersey Optometric Association, says, "It would be for me or any one else who has a great amount of good that will result from this recent change in the style of type used in many newspapers. This type is not recognized, appreciated, and so acknowledged by every eye in the composition of the page. It is the type used in many newspapers. This type is the day when artificial aid must be

Frigidaire Company Reported Increasing 1927 Newspaper Appropriation to $2,000,000—Vesta Tube Using Sunday Papers—Palm Olive Plans Merger

DUE to the success of their present advertising campaign the Frigidaire Company, Dayton, O., formerly Delco Light, is reported planning to increase the newspaper list from 1,800 to 2,000. About $2,000,000 will be spent in newspaper advertising next year. The total appropriation will be $5,000,000.

The Vesta Battery Corporation, Chicago, started Dec. 5 placing an advertising campaign for Vesta tube, in Sunday newspapers in 16 large cities. The account is being placed by Auspitz-Lee-Harvey Company, Chicago. The advertising of Vesta battery will continue to be placed by Charles H. Touzalin Advertising Company, Chicago.

Charles Pierce, president of the Palm Olive Company, this week announced plans for the merger of his firm with the Peet Brothers Company of Kansas City and San Francisco, manufacturer of laundry soap. The stockholders will vote on the proposed consolidation Dec. 17. If the plan is approved the new corporation will be known as the Palm-Olive-Peet Company.

The 1927 newspaper advertising schedule for the Syracuse Washing Machine Company is now being prepared by the George Batten Company, New York. This year this firm spent $500,000 in newspaper advertising, using 60 dailies.

L. L. Perrin, until recently city editor of the St. Paul Dispatch, has been named advertising manager of the Northern Pacific Railway with headquarters in St. Paul. Mr. Perrin succeeds Ralph W. Hobbs, who goes to Pittsburgh as general sales manager for Armour and Company. Mr. Hobbs will have charge of sales in several eastern states for the packing company.

The Moxie Company, users of newspaper space, reports a remarkable gain for the current year of $205,738 in earnings despite an unusually cool summer and general unfavorable weather. An increase is noted in November alone of $30,658. The company is now located in a modern and up-to-date plant, having disposed of all its old holdings.

The Oil Burner Dealers' Association of Kansas City, Mo., is advertising in the newspapers to promote the idea of oil burning. Dealers sponsoring the campaign include distillate and fuel oil dealers and makers of oil tanks and furnaces.

W. B. Forshay Company, Minneapolis investment house, with offices in many cities, is conducting an advertising contest which is scheduled to end April 30, 1927, with announcement of winners June 1, 1927. First prize is $2,500. The winning advertisements, whether newspaper copy, a booklet or other form of advertisement, will be widely presented in the 150 cities and towns served by affiliated companies. E. D. Nelson, advertising manager, has announced.

Newspapers are being used to promote "Rolls Ruff", a new candy bar, product of the Croft & Allen Corporation, Philadelphia and Bethlehem. Joseph Richards Company, Inc., New York, is directing the account.

The Imperial Tobacco Combine of England, until now a comparatively small advertiser, is reported to have appropriated $5,000,000 for advertising in 1927.

A national newspaper, magazine and business paper campaign has just been launched for Pabst-ett, a food product of which cheese is the basis. The agency is Klau-Van Pieterston-Dunlap-Young-green, Milwaukee.

Thomas P. Comeford, formerly publicity director of the Namm Store, Brooklyn, has been appointed sales director for the May Company, Cleveland. He assumes his new duties about Jan. 1.

Sesamee Company, Hartford, Conn., will shortly begin an advertising campaign for "Keyless" locks, a new invention. Lyddon & Hanford Company, New York, is handling the copy and space buying.

P. Lorillard Company which introduced "Old Gold" cigarettes to the New England market through newspaper space, is now placing copy through Lennon & Mitchell, New York, in other territory.

"Barking Dog" and old, but hitherto unadvertised cigarette, was introduced to New York City smokers last week by a smashing advertising drive handled by the Federal Advertising Agency. It is a product of the Continental Tobacco Company. For the winter season, sales effort is to be confined to New York, but in the Spring newspapers will be used to popularize the smoke in other cities. Window displays featuring a bull dog's head and newspaper space formed the backbone of the New York campaign. Copy averaging about 500 lines went into four dailies.

Ninety newspapers are on the list of a special Christmas advertising campaign for oranges started by the California Fruit Growers Exchange, through the Los Angeles office of Lord & Thomas and Logan.

Ground Gripper Shoe Company, Inc., Boston, Mass., will advertise to women through newspapers during 1927. Frank Seaman, Inc., New York, is directing the account.

"Just one reason—it pays." That is how W. K. Kellogg, Kellogg Toasted Corn Flakes Company, explains why he believes in an intensive use of newspapers as compared with other advertising programs.

A letter he wrote the Chicago Tribune on the subject reads in part:

"Our sales records over a long period of years have demonstrated clearly the value of intensive newspaper advertising to develop large volume in local territories. We have found that our salesmen, jobbers and dealers react very favorably to this plan of advertising.

"As you will recall, some twelve or fourteen years ago, we used your paper with only a very few others. The result of the intensive use of newspapers as compared with other advertising programs, has justified us in constantly broadening this plan until we are now using well over a thousand newspapers in every section of the country. The adoption of this policy by this Company is based on just one reason—it pays!"

The Chicago manufacturers of Mule Hide Shingles, the Lehon Company, are preparing their 1927 advertising list of papers through the Pace Company, Chicago.

National advertising as a means of preserving the cedar shingle industry was the chief topic of discussion at the 10th annual meeting of the Red Cedar Shingle Congress held at the Olympic Hotel, Seattle, Dec. 2 and 3.

URGE PUBLICITY TAX

Penny a Pound Levy Proposed in British Advertising Bill

(Special to Editor & Publisher)

LONDON, NOV. 29.—A penny in the pound on the rateable value of the town or city will be the proposed sum that British municipal authorities will be allowed to spend on local publicity if the new bill which the Hull Corporation is to introduce into Parliament shortly, is passed.

Municipal advertising in Britain in past years has been mostly done by holiday resorts, whose traders have co-operated with the railway company serving the town to advertise to attract their fair quota of holiday-makers in the season. Consequent on the growth of the publicity club movement, manufacturing and industrial towns are awakening to the fact that the municipality must advertise co-operatively, as well as the publicity undertaken by individual factories and business houses, and the penny in the pound scheme is regarded as the best means for achieving this end.

Birmingham, for example, would raise about £30,000 annually by the scheme, and Ernest Morison, Publicity Director of the City of Hull, urged the advantages of this method by raising a publicity fund as against the usual plan of voluntary subscriptions, at a meeting of the Birmingham Publicity Club at the end of November.

WOMEN IN ADVERTISING AND JOURNALISM

Mrs. E. R. Thomas Playing New Role in Life's Drama—New Woman Sport Columnist in Boston—Miss Mabel Kenea Joint Owner of Iowa Paper

MRS. E. R. THOMAS, once known as Lucy Cotton on stage and screen, is playing what she thinks is the most important role of her career, that of

It is not, however, mere play acting, this new work Mrs. Thomas has undertaken, she insisted in an interview this week, during which she dramatized the routine of the newspaper business. She doesn't go to the office every day, but she reads the Telegraph thoroughly each night when it is brought to her apartment fresh from the press room. She has ideas and ideals for that sportsman's paper. Since the Telegraph is called America's authority on affairs of the stage, screen and turf, Mrs. Thomas, her experience as an actress so recently behind her, is well cast for her latest part.

"Do you know," she confided at the start of the interview, "people have told me they would give a million dollars to be in the business I'm in now. Just as once my career was the stage and screen, I'm now making publishing my life work. The happiest people in the world are those who have something to do, who are accomplishing something. And this is a real, vital, throbbing, big thing I am doing now. I wouldn't be doing anything else for the world."

Mrs. Thomas took charge of the Telegraph on Sept. 14. She has, she declared, the "best talent in the world" to assist her in realizing her ambition, which is "to make the Morning Telegraph so interesting, entertaining and unusual that after they have read all other papers, New Yorkers won't be satisfied until they have read my paper."

"I'm not a mere onlooker. I'm right in the midst of things. I know what I want and I'm getting it," Mrs. Thomas said in explaining Telegraph policies.

"While we intend to specialize on the stage, screen and turf we are at the same time trying to broaden our field. Our women's page, for instance, is new. We have found that there are 150,000 women club members in New York. We are covering the news of these clubs as they have never been covered before. We aren't giving just dry data on their affairs, we are printing personal intimate inside chatty stuff that the whole world likes to read.

"Then we have started Beau Brummel's Diary, which gives inside, and I hope, harmless information about society.

"I am making up our Sunday pictorial section each week myself. Our feature pictures are usually two autographed portraits of stage stars and two screen stars.

"We are publishing a paper of personalities. We carry this idea through all our departments, including even the financial section.

"We don't want press agent stuff; we want our stories and pictures interesting."

A campaign the Telegraph has started since Mrs. Thomas took charge is directed against the "nuisance tax" on theatre tickets. Recently the paper held a mass meeting on the subject at Madison Square Garden. Mrs. Thomas is confident that the Telegraph will be instrumental in having the tax repealed.

Also since she took charge, the tipster advertising the Telegraph carries has been cleaned-up.

"Every horse named by a tipster as a likely winner is registered by the Telegraph," Mrs. Thomas said. "We make our tipster advertisers tell the truth. We don't let a tipster say he picked a long shot if he didn't. As we carry it now, I believe, tipster advertising is honest and legitimate."

Mrs. Thomas is mother of an 18-months-old baby girl, Lucy Cotton, nicknamed "Lucetta."

"I'm not making plans for Lucetta's future," Mrs. Thomas said. "I'll let her express herself, let her choose her own career."

This maternal policy coincides with Mrs. Thomas' editorial policy on the Telegraph.

"We believe in personal freedom," she said. "We will never preach to our readers. We'll not seek to reform them. We won't tell them what to do and what not to do. Our only quarrel will be with a government of the people which forbids and prohibits personal freedom."

On the stage as Lucy Cotton, Mrs. Thomas played in "Turn to the Right," "Polygamy," "Up in Mabel's Room," "Little Women" and the "Quaker Girl." The moving pictures in which she was cast included "The Miracle of Love," "The Prodigal Wife," and "Whispering Shadows."

Miss Mabel Kenea, for nine years assistant editor of the Clarinda (Ia.) Journal, has become joint owner of the paper with Edwin C. Lane partner of her father, J. R. Kenea, whose death occurred 10 days ago, after 60 years as a printer and editor. The firm name of Kenea & Lane, which has stood a half century will be unchanged.

Dorothy Lindsay is conducting a daily column "Women in Sports" in the Boston (Mass.) Herald as an added feature of the sports pages.

Miss Lucretia M. O'Connor, formerly of the Worcester (Mass.) Telegram reporter staff and more recently in social service work, has joined the women's department of the Worcester Evening Post. She replaces Mrs. Clarence L. Wilson, resigned.

Miss Minnie Jarnagin, former society editor of the Knoxville Sentinel, is now on the proof desk of the Knoxville Journal.

Mrs. Frances Gale Cornelius, feature writer for the Charlotte (N. C.) Observer for the last year, has resigned.

Miss Dove Montgomery of Barnsdall, Okla., who has been a reporter for the Pawhuska (Okla.) Daily Journal-Capital, has gone to New York to enter the Columbia University School of Journalism, taking work toward her master's degree.

Miss Marion Hertha Clarke of the Albert Frank Company, of Boston, Mass., advertising agents, spoke on "How to Reach Women Buyers Through Advertising" at the first banquet of the Advertising Club of New Bedford (Mass.), Wednesday night at the New Bedford Hotel. Miss Clark was one of the speakers at the Worcester convention last month.

Nadine Irene Robbins, assistant editor of the Homekeeper's section of the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, was married Thanksgiving day to Frederick Karl Schroeder of Seattle.

Advertising women in St. Louis gave a dinner at the Town Club there recently for Miss Gene Ellinger in honor of her tenth year in advertising, all of that time as a copywriter with one company, the Chappelow Advertising Company.

Miss Natalie Harris, on the editorial staff of the Boston (Mass.) Traveler, was married recently to Pierre Collings of Hollywood, Cal., a writer on the staff of the Famous Players-Lasky Company. The couple will make their home in Hollywood.

N. Y. TIMES TO PRINT SPECIAL LIBRARY EDITION ON DURABLE RAG PAPER

Limited Number Will Be Available Daily for Libraries and Archives—American Journalistic Record of History During Wood Pulp Era Is Doomed to Vanish

THE New York Times on Jan. 1 next will begin to print daily a limited number of copies of its regular editions on a pure 100 per cent rag paper, it announced in an article in that paper Dec. 5, by Waldo Walker. These copies will be used exclusively thereafter for the regular bound files supplied to libraries and other archives. It will be the first time the Times has been printed on rag paper since the Civil War. It will also represent, it is believed, the first instance in which any newspaper has printed an edition on all-rag paper since the inferior but more economical wood-fibre newsprint universally took its place, beginning in the '70s and '80s.

The return to the time-proof rag fibre for the special library edition has been prompted by a desire to preserve the newspaper record of daily life in permanent form before it is too late, and by a realization that this is something which rapidly deteriorating wood-fibre paper is physically unable to do. Indeed, American journalism from the '70s and '80s up to today appears certain to become eventually a blank.

For example, the bulk of even the 1914-18 newspaper accounts of the World War has already yellowed and aged so badly in the files that complete disintegration and disappearance are only a question of a few years more. Only emergency measures taken in some far-seeing quarters have preserved some of the newspapers containing the day-by-day record of the war. But though these editions printed on wood paper only ten or twelve years ago are all but scraps, journals and gazettes of the Revolutionary War period, printed on good rag paper 150 years ago, are in shape to be consultable, and evidently will remain so for years to come.

Such considerations have forced the conclusion that something had to be done about preserving contemporary newspaper records to save the present era as a whole "from becoming a Dark Age in subsequent centuries."

The superiority of rag, or cotton, paper to wood paper is conveniently illustrated in the respective files of newspapers, old and new, to be seen at the New York Public Library. To see what rag paper is like, and how it endures, one need but ask for the file of the London Times for the year 1842. The pages of the famous British journal will be found as fresh and sound, save for a mere edging of tan, as probably the day they came from the press. The paper used has proved so strong that it has outlasted several successive bindings.

A look at New York City newspapers, printed on wood fibre in 1914, in 1920, even some of them in 1922, will show them to be wrecks. Still older files of the '90s and early 1900s are difficult to read, difficult to handle; the life gone. Under repeated handling, the war and post-war editions have been torn from the stitching in the files at a rate to indicate that the original bindery might as well have attempted the sewing of soda crackers. Their pages are obscure and charred to a dull brown by exposure to the light and air. The edges break off in brittle wafers at a touch.

When H. M. Lydenberg, in charge of the reference division, found the library's war newspaper record disappearing he resorted to an ingenious Japanese tissue process to save it. He replaced the damaged files with duplicates furnished by the publishers and then faced separately each one of the thousands of new sheets, front and back, with the transparent special film. It gave the pages a gray, out-of-focus look, but retained full legibility and added valuable reinforcement as well as permanent protection.

inal expense. Rare books which could not be replaced are similarly treated.

The establishment of the Times' rag paper edition will come as a climax to thought and experiment along this line for more than a decade. Mr. Lydenberg finds from his files that two other experiments have been made—one by the Brooklyn Eagle in 1913, the other by the London Times. The Brooklyn paper the year before the World War printed a special library edition for twelve months on a paper stock that was three-quarters rag and one-quarter wood fibre. Files costing $2,367 for the newsprint alone were furnished to fifteen libraries, which subscribed $14 each, bringing a gross return to the Eagle of $210, Mr. Lydenberg said.

The enterprise was discontinued after the paper had taken a loss, independent of labor and overhead, of $2,157. The London Times abandoned rag fibre for wood-pulp newsprint many years ago. Several years ago, feeling the need of a more durable stock for files, it began printing a special library edition on a heavier and better grade of sulphite wood-pulp paper, weighing ninety-six pounds to the ream. This special edition is still being printed.

To comprehend what happens to paper made of wood fibre to make it die comparatively early and what constitutes the superiority of rag paper, one needs an understanding that the former paper is nothing but a mechanical mixture of fibres, reduced from the raw wood, either mechanically by grinding or chemically by dissolving the fibres apart.

In either event the wood-pulp fibres inevitably retain most of the original impurity, in a paper-making sense, of the raw wood. These impurities are turpentine, resins, gums or sap. These nourishing "fats" remaining in groundwood constitute its weakness.

The theory upon which rag paper is made is that the nearer to a pure cellulose the fibers of a given paper approach, the greater should be the life of that paper. Not only does rag fiber receive the advantage of the embalming effect conferred by being prepared chemically, but, for the purposes of paper, its fibre is far more rugged and is biologically superior to that of wood. One authority, in discussing the relative durability of rag and wood paper, says:

"Rag fibres, properly treated, approach very closely to the pure cellulose state, whereas wood fibres, no matter how carefully prepared, contain many impurities, which disintegrate rapidly. If the refining process is carried far enough to overcome or remove these impurities, the fibres themselves break down and become worthless. Not so, however, with rag fibres. These start off in a nearly pure state. The bleaching removes the coloring matter in the rags, and the gentle cooking and washing process removes the bleach or any other impurities which may exist, so that the resulting fibres are very close to chemically pure cellulose, the basis of the life of paper."

The all-rag paper to be used by the New York Times was selected after numerous tests covering a period of twelve months—pop tests, folding tests, tearing tests. Strips of rag paper and ordinary groundwood newsprint were placed together and exposed to sunlight over a length of time. The rag paper remained white and clear throughout; the groundwood paper turned brown and brittle as though a scorching hot iron had been left upon it.

Ninety per cent of the rag fibre produced today is used in combination with wood fibre, records of the paper industry show. United States paper money is the only all-rag product in common use. The New York Times decided, however, that the special library edition must be printed on a pure 100 per cent rag paper to insure against any chemical process of deterioration continuing in the paper, as would be inevitable if part wood pulp were used. The Forest Products Laboratory of the United States Department of Agriculture at Madison, Wis., reported from samples submitted that the rag paper the New York Times finally selected was of a quality that would "last indefinitely."

The all-rag newsprint to be used by the Times in the special library edition was developed in co-operation with the Paper Manufacturers' Educational Association.

WELL, after all, what is news? Every man who has been at the job of writing and editing it for more than five years has his own definition. As men differ in their ideas of the job in hand, particularly in appreciation of the public responsibilities involved, they variously define the commodity which is their stock in trade. I have just had two hours of unmixed joy reading a book fresh from the Alfred A. Knopf press by Gerald White Johnson, of the Baltimore Evening Sun, titled "What is News?" It is the latest of a series of journalism books that Nelson A. Crawford is editing, to my notion a valuable addition to the lore of the American press. Mr. Johnson talks shop in the terms of a master craftsman and also as an individual of uncommon perception. He gives an entirely new and deeply penetrating definition of news and defends his theory with an analysis that is as refreshing as a cold cup on a hot trail.

AT the outset of this unmatched discussion of the news problem the author sets out clearly the selective processes that we engage in when we make a newspaper. We are newspaper men satisfying our own opinions of what interests, not us, but our readers, and we pick and choose from an assortment of copy which, if used in its entirety, would fill our columns dozens of times and then run over. The basic assumption is that the newspaper worker is a man of sufficient cultural development to desire certain definite rewards over and above the weekly pay-envelope. Men who are not inspired by such motives simply perform as drudges. Most of us are in it because we like the work. The satisfactions, other than the financial ones, are not numerous, but two of them are self-esteem and exercise of power. There is in the average newspaper man the conviction that the work, whatever it may be at present, might be made a business of worth and dignity. Since self-esteem is a satisfaction the intelligent man cannot for long content himself with journalism in its lower forms. Stories of lechery and crime are news, but the man who would deliver them full strength to all comers would be classified with cocaine peddlers. On the other hand, as the pharmacopoeia cannot be restricted to sugar of milk, so a newspaper cannot fill its pages with sweetness and light to the exclusion of all else. In the selective process there is no fixed law as between Pollyanna and the Marquis de Sade. Newspaper men, according to their individual senses of honor and principle, must themselves decide what shall or shall not go into print. Newspapers are what we make them.

THE author, discussing timeliness and significance as criteria of good news stories, holds that the skillful reporter can make good stories from trivial facts without regard to time, and cites numerous incidents to support the claim. One Spring morning Henry Hyde of the Baltimore Sun, walking to the office noticed the gay summer dresses the business girls were wearing and his imagination thrilled to a gorgeous parade. Of course, it happened every morning, but he wrote a resplendent article that was easily the best thing in print in the Sun for that day. In a great measure news depends on the news-gatherers.

DISCUSSING "barriers, real and imaginary," Mr. Johnson shows how a newspaper man is conditioned by his environment, following the ideal life only within sharply defined and narrow limits. After all, the papers must be sold. A newspaper man may not be conscious of the slightest desire to reform the world or hold position of honor, but the will to power is in all normal men. A declining circulation does not indicate success or power. Both commercial and psychological necessity is playing in us all. The reader is to be reckoned with. The public lays definite inhibitions upon the newspaper worker, is not interested in disagreeable truths and really objects to them, and they must be handled with care. However, Mr. Johnson finds that the inhibitions that the public lays upon newspaper workers have been exaggerated and shows that it is not so much the matter as the handling of matter that counts. Almost anything, even the indecencies, can be printed if skillfully written. Most of the inhibitions are bogies held up to scare cubs half to death. An individual, such as an advertiser, may throttle a paper, but the public prohibits nothing. Our real inhibitions are our incapacities.

AFTER showing that the newspaper man is not compelled to trumpet to the world everything that comes his way and that the public lays no real restrictions upon his choice of news, with exceptions such as news that no journalist in his right mind could ignore, the author goes into the matter of positive influences of the newspaper-reading public upon the news. His point is that the American people demand a good show of everyone appealing for support, and this includes newspapers. Good show, type not specified, is the rule, accounting for the success of various styles of journalism. The notion that a newspaper must be shallow and trivial to be entertaining is attributed to inferior craftsmen who are incapable, the author declares, of appreciating the difference between high comedy and farce. The public does demand technical ability from every newspaper man. Mr. Johnson states the rules and standards in our journalism in very satisfactory fashion. Later on he says he has never met a newspaper man who had the slightest glimmer of a notion of how to reform the world, and not many of real ability who desired to pose as reformers. The average man's ideal news story would not serve any particularly high or holy purpose. Newspaper work is not evangelism.

TO me, the strongest chapter in Mr. Johnson's book deals with the perils attending out and out commercialization of the press. Outlining the history of the constitutional grant of freedom he shows that Thomas Jefferson was able to convince the people that from this guarantee of freedom would accrue definite and substantial benefits. However, freedom of the press was and is a privilege, but not an inalienable right. The first benefit was watchful defense of our liberties. The second was prompt and accurate information. Here Mr. Johnson remarks: "Now neither of these expectations bears any direct relation to the enterprise of filling a newspaper's coffers, or of making a senator of its publisher. The privileged position granted to the press by government at the express mandate of the people is in no wise justified by the use of the newspaper for purely commercial ends, or for personal political ends. . . . If the question were put to them, no doubt a majority of Americans would still say they favor an absolutely free press. But as a matter of practical fact there is no strong or vigilant public opinion supporting it. Inch by inch, the press has been losing ground for at least ten years. The restrictions of the post-office department grow more and more rigid. The second-class mailing privilege has come to be of so little value that periodicals of large national circulation have partially abandoned it, and daily newspapers have entirely abandoned it insofar as their circulation within a radius of 50 to 100 miles of the office of publication is concerned. The disposition of Congress to pass regulatory laws increases. The Postmaster-General has assumed the right of absolute censorship, a position more autocratic than that of the Russian censorship under the czars, and the assumption goes unchallenged." The author goes on to say that this is happening without sign of check by the public and finally asserts that it is fairly clear that the prestige of the press with the people is crumbling. He concludes the chapter by declaring that it is obvious that the purely commercial standard for the press is unsafe.

FROM this analysis, which I fear is very inadequately sketched here, the author leads to his definition of news. Here it is: "News is such an account of such events as a first-rate newspaper man, acting as such, finds satisfaction in writing and publishing." A first-rate newspaper man is a skilled and honorable craftsman, acting according to the dictates of his conscience and intelligence. He is above all mean motives. He acts as a newspaper man, not a partisan serving personal enthusiasms, prejudices or doing the bidding of some person who does not qualify as a news writer. "First-rate newspaper man" is taken by the author to preclude the possibility of any unworthy act or engagement in any low form of journalism. Mr. Johnson does not believe that money is one of the satisfactions, for newspaper men are too intelligent to believe that money buys self-esteem or power worth having. The news that an intelligent man finds most satisfaction in is that which tests his professional capacity in its presentation. "In general practise," the book concludes, "news is what is in the newspapers; and newspapers are what newspaper men make them" and Mr. Johnson regards this as a "rather terrible reflection."

Lynn Editors Receive Petition from Local Ministers

Lynn, Mass., newspaper editors have been requested in a resolution adopted by the Lynn Inter-Church Union to suppress crime news, or if they publish it to edit such accounts so carefully that no reader, whether young or old, would think that crime is attractive or would fail to see the menace not only to his own better self but to the life of the community.

The ministers who comprise the membership of the union declared that the large amount of space devoted to the recent Hall-Mills murder trial was in a degree responsible for the union's action.

CHICAGO BROADCASTER CITED FOR CONTEMPT

Owner of WGES Hailed to Court When He Disobeys Injunction Obtained by Tribune in Wave Length Fight

The Chicago Tribune has won another round in its fight to keep WGES from broadcasting on a wave length of 315.6 meters, on the ground that such broadcasting interferes with the programs of WGN, the Tribune's station.

J. Louis Guyon, owner of a west side ballroom and operator of station WGES, was ordered by Judge Francis Wilson in the Circuit Court on Dec. 7, to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt of court as violator of an injunction restraining him from broadcasting on a wave length of 315.6 meters. Mr. Guyon was named in two petitions, one alleging civil and one criminal contempt.

The petitions, which were filed by attorneys representing the Tribune, name, in addition to Guyon, the Oak Leaves Broadcasting Company, Inc.; George P. Gubbins, announcer for WGES, and Joseph Brubaker, chief operator for the station.

The petition alleging civil contempt charges that station WGES, having been enjoined from broadcasting on the 315.6 meter wave length in an order issued by Judge Wilson, came back on the air and resumed broadcasting on the same wave length, although using considerably less power. The petition gives Mr. Guyon and his co-respondents 10 days to answer under oath. WGES, the petition further states, is still causing material interference with the programs of WGN, even with the reduced power.

The second petition is in the nature of a charge of criminal contempt and is based largely on advertisements alleged to have been published and speeches made by Guyon and his announcer, Gubbins, since the court's order Nov. 20. The petition asserts that Guyon and the other respondents have operated station WGES since Nov. 24 on a very much reduced electrical power as compared to that used prior to the original injunction and by omitting to disclose that fact to the public in the advertisements and speeches are attempting to give the impression that WGES was causing no more interference at the time the Tribune started the original suit than it has since it resumed broadcasting.

The petition also charges that the respondents by the advertisements and speeches have sought to give a false and misleading construction to the opinion of Judge Wilson. Among other devices for accomplishing this, it is charged that the respondents have set up in this advertisement a small portion of supposed evidence in their favor without any reference to the vast amount of evidence that was heard by the court.

200,000 CHICAGO TOTS IN DAILY NEWS CLUBS

Growth of Paper's Topsy Turvey
Time Club and Wide Awake
Club Aided by Radio Programs

A survey recently concluded by the Chicago Daily News revealed that the total membership of that newspaper's two children's clubs totaled 200,000. Names of the clubs are the Topsy Turvey Time club and the Wide-Awake club, the former now having a membership of 175,000 and the latter, established nearly 21 years ago, with an enrollment today of 36,000. Their combined memberships, the Daily News pointed out in a recent story, is greater than the total population of many cities.

Growth of the younger organization was speeded by the popularity of the radio. At 5.15 each afternoon, Russell Pratt, the Topsy Turvey Time man conducts the T. T. T. program over station WMAQ. More than 125 charters for branch clubs all over the country have been issued. A miniature paper called the Topsy Turvey News appears on the back page of the Daily News every evening.

The Wide-Awake club with its 36,000 members, enrolled day by day during two decades, shapes its weekly page not only to amuse or entertain by pictures, puzzles and stories but to give room for children specialists. Boys and girls who expect to become writers join the Story Maker's Guild and compete for the monthly book prize or for appearance in print. Nature lovers join Two-Eyes section and report what interests them in birds and plants. The Dolly Dressers submit sewing, the Cooking club makes experiments.

The Wide-Awake radio program, given weekly, and the dramatic performances of the Wide-Awake players have a good deal to do, too, with the acquaintance that is so genuine within this big family.

of 1893.' To Mr. Stone, for over a quarter of a century its general manager, to Victor F. Lawson, its first president, to Frank B. Noyes, who is serving his 27th year as president and to a group of their fellow newspaper publishers of that eventful year there was seen as much of tyranny menaced by the nation's information being in the control of a despot as actually was suffered by the colonist of 1776 through misgovernment by George III.

"Diligently they set to work to create something that would throw safeguards around the reporting of news. To keep pure the channels of public information they adopted this cooperative idea.

"Be it remembered that among its 1,200 members every shade of political and religious belief is represented. The work of the association, therefore, is subject to the critical eye of each of these members who through intimate contact would sense the slightest tendentious trend in news reporting long before the layman would see it.

"That, then, is the form of organization by which it was sought to safeguard for the public the impartiality and truthfulness of the news. It was a striving toward honest service by newspaper publishers to their fellow men. Today, with its record of 33 years, it is a living evidence of their ideals.

"No human activity of the magnitude of the Associated Press should escape criticism if it could. The Associated Press welcomes criticism. Being the product of humans it is intensely human and therefore it is not inerrant. It has been charged with being controlled by this or that religious denomination, this or that political party, this or that economic or social movement. If any of these charges were true the very ideal which prompted its existence would be shattered. It was to prevent any such control that its form of organization was adopted. If it is not hewing to the line of impartiality which was drawn for it to follow, it is a matter of intense concern to you as a reader and as a citizen. If it is not what it professes to be it can be discredited. Fortunately, therefore, the blazing sun of publicity shines upon its every published work. Its members and its management would not have it otherwise.

"There has been comment to the effect that its treatment of news of social, partisan or denominational movements proves its partiality. The charge is made by those zealous in furthering or opposing a particular social, partisan or denominational idea. Intensely interested in their views themselves they want the Associated Press to crusade for them. A zealot can never believe that publication would be refused for such a simple reason as that his views are not of general interest.

"Therein the zealot lacks news sense. For it must be understood that people and events are given space in newspapers in the degree that they are interesting to other people. This is axiomatic if there is any science in making successful newspapers. And since newspapers are successful in the degree that they obtain reader interest it must be obvious that there is a constant search for matter of general interest. But because, in serving its member newspapers, the Associated Press applies its news judgment it has found itself simultaneously charged with being controlled by both proponents and opponents of this or that movement.

"It has within a single year been charged with being controlled by the Roman Catholic church and by the Ku Klux Klan; by Henry Ford and by the Jews; it has been charged with favoring capital and opposing labor and favoring labor and opposing capital. Reflection upon this reputed control by opposing forces ought to prove the impartiality of the Associated Press and prove its freedom from the control of any movement, however worthy the movement may be.

"I have told you of what brought the Associated Press into existence, what it is and what it does. I have referred to some criticisms that have been made concerning it. In conclusion I want to impress upon you the importance to you of the task it has assigned itself. If you are a good citizen you must acquaint yourself with what is going on. The Associated Press serves newspapers from which you put more into your minds than from what you read from any other source. Since the largest newspaper can print only a fraction of the entire Associated Press report it is given only to telegraph editors of member newspapers and to employees of the Associated Press to read this most complete compilation in existence of the day by day story of humanity. In its completeness it is a story indeed! What man does is interesting; the record of the problems that confront him is portentous; his effort at solving them is inspiring. One is moved to elation at his success or regret at his failure. Always, the story has some form of human appeal else it would not be news. Your newspaper selects that which it thinks will interest you most and in doing that it probably gives you more than you have time to read.

"You make the news, the Associated Press records it and you read it. In that process you appear twice and the Associated Press once, the latter appearing only in your Associated Press newspaper. The work of the Associated Press is important to you. Well enough, then, that 1,200 newspaper publishers in our land have pledged their faith to you that you will have true, unbiased news, for true, unbiased news is at once potent and militant, as useful in its purpose as are the rays of the sun in their purpose."

AIR CHAOS IS NATION-WIDE, SURVEY BY RADIO MAGAZINE SHOWS

Increased Power and Willful Changing of Wave Lengths Make Clear Reception Difficult in Many Parts of the Country

INTERFERENCE conditions throughout the country are bad, according to a survey made by Radio Retailing, through its representatives located in various sections of the country, and reprinted by the New York Times. Listeners in every section complain of heterodyne whistles, caused by the interaction of two or more waves too close to each other.

The survey follows:

NEW YORK: Broadcasting situation rapidly nearing crucial point in New York and vicinity. Appearance, below 400 meters, of many new stations using low power prevents satisfactory reception of old standbys broadcasting worthwhile programs. Several poorly equipped stations have increased power. Heterodyne whistles and interstation interference particularly noticeable in Brooklyn and Long Island, where new small stations are causing considerable disturbance. Condition, prevalent for month, though not yet seriously affecting retail sales, is causing concern in trade. Unless clarified, business depression is inevitable. Dealers report difficulty in making satisfactory demonstrations. At most, New York has eight stations from which decent programs may be received without heterodyning howls. WNYC, WEA, WJZ, WOR and several others seldom interfered with, but situation below 380 meters deplorable.

DETROIT: Reception conditions here bad and getting worse. All agree that interference is bad. Number of stations heterodyning estimated from 20 to 65 per cent of all stations. Several stations criticized for using so much power as to drown out others on nearby wave lengths. Impossible to hold Chicago stations long. Distributors of high-price sets say condition is affecting sales seriously, as it is impossible to escape heterodyning and confusion, even with best.

SAN FRANCISCO: Reception fair on Pacific Coast. Changes in wave length following end of government control do not seriously affect local reception. Action of Pacific Radio Trade Association in asking pledges of broadcasting stations to abide by District Radio Inspectors' decision when changes are desired has brought pledges from all important stations and majority of smaller ones. Twenty-five per cent of Mid-West stations conflict with local wave lengths on set of average sensitivity. Eastern stations conflict, but situation better because of three-hour time difference. San José Station KQW broke agreement for silence between 7:30 and 8. Dealers who sell on local programs content with situation, but general feeling that action should be taken to clear distance reception.

NEW ORLEANS: Radio men and retailers here report heterodyne squeals on all broadcasting stations up to 350 meters, at times making programs unintelligible. This condition is true on almost all occasions; the only exceptions are the super-power and local stations, which generally come in clearly through interference. Only two super-power stations below 350 meters are clearly received here. No one looks for slump after holidays. Condition of cotton crop may affect buying late in winter and spring. Percentage of sales in country better than in city. New Orleans market signally free from price-cutting.

PHILADELPHIA: Interference caused by heterodyning stations creating considerable trouble has been prevalent for past three weeks. Super-power stations among those being heterodyned. Programs from at least eight of thirty stations made useless. Weather conditions very favorable for perfect reception. At least thirty-two stations affected by this disturbance. Many listeners complain about the logging of stations, as these vary almost every night. Greatest change noticed below 350 meters. There has been no change in wave lengths in this territory, and from latest reports there is no tendency for same. Static level very low and many distant stations received with ease. Loop-type receivers becoming more popular due to prevailing conditions.

BOSTON: This section records uneven conditions in reception. Average clear nightly reception with moderate-priced machine set at six stations. With special high-power sets forty-five stations covering East and Central States can be recorded. Average receiver experiencing trouble in bringing in stations clearly. Two local stations, WEEI and WBX, with nearly equal wave lengths, overlap, and operators constantly complain to broadcasters. With WNAC much trouble is reported. Attempts made to agree on schedules so far a failure. Outside Boston area situation is perplexing. Northern district blanketed from Boston during operation of WEEI and WBZ, and receives mostly New York and Canadian stations. Southern Massachusetts has dead zone. South of Boston has trouble getting WEEI, due to bad air racket from southerly points. Unless best sets used, operators must expect squeals in this district from three local stations. As compared with last year conditions are worse.

WASHINGTON, D. C.: Reception conditions in Washington better than in most localities. This territory fortunate in experiencing little or no heterodyning on local stations, but distant stations almost impossible to hear because of squeals. Dealers report there are only one or two receivers on the market which can be demonstrated satisfactorily on other than local stations. Reception conditions considered good compared to rest of country, in that at least local stations can be heard.

CHICAGO: Heterodyne squeals from interfering stations very serious here, particularly on lower wave bands. Since Oct. 15 has been rapidly growing worse. At least seven Chicago stations are heterodyning each other. Many Chicago stations and distant outfits also interfering. Dealers say 25 per cent of local stations heterodyning. Two Eastern stations which use crystal control come in on definite dial settings and are favored by Western fans. Dealers say expert tuner can get many distant stations, but not loud and accompanied by whistling. Average owner can get few outsider stations.

KANSAS CITY: Radio business here exceeding all expectations, despite serious station interference. But dealers claim they could surely sell additional 30 per cent of demonstrations if it were not for heterodyning. No more than eight stations are received clearly over entire dial. One near-by station reported particularly objectionable. Has jumped its original wave length, is broad on the air, often has mediocre and self-seeking programs and blankets three popular stations.

TORONTO: Interference caused by heterodyning stations becoming serious menace to demonstration in Toronto and district. Extent of trouble may be gauged from fact that on some nights it is impossible to get anything lower in wave length than KDKA at 309 meters. Heterodyning in this district is particularly noticeable from Chicago stations, some of which are now on the wave lengths of Canadian stations. Some low-power stations are particularly objectionable and are cutting each other's broadcast to pieces. One station appears to sit on CKCL wave length of 356.9 meters. There is another noticeable disturbance between Buffalo and Miami Beach. Difficult to detect heterodyning stations except with wave meter, because the broadcast is so badly chopped.

DENVER: Interference is prevalent in this territory. Some report as high as 75 per cent of stations received cannot be cleared of heterodyne squeals. This condition seems to be more common in the mountain districts. It reaches its highest point in the large cities and within fifty miles of local broadcasting stations. Consensus of reports indicates stations located on the Pacific Coast can be received with much less interference than those located east of Denver.

PITTSBURGH: No considerable amount of comment in local district on present chaotic broadcasting condition. Occasional criticisms are made by fans who want distant stations. This lack of complaint here is due to the presence of two high-class stations, whose programs are rapidly becoming metropolitan by continual linking with New York and other stations. Such broadcasting satisfies the local fan, giving better reception than by trying to get distant stations direct.

AWARDS BRAVERY PRIZES

Because two acts of exceptional bravery stood out on the records of the police and fire departments during November, the Chicago Tribune doubled its usual trophy and awarded two prizes of $100 each for that month. The acts were a thrilling rescue by a fireman and the capture of an alleged bootlegger by a wounded policeman.

OUR OWN WORLD OF LETTERS

By JAMES MELVIN LEE

A LITTLE book that has not attracted the attention that it should in newspaper circles is "A Summer Vacation As a War Correspondent" by Charles Edward Bray who was given a commission as special correspondent of the New Orleans (La.) Times-Picayune to spend two months during 1925 in France, Germany and England. What Mr. Bray sent his paper while abroad has been brought together in a little book of about 100 pages which gives his impression of the great European conflict as gained by a casual observer. The volume is illustrated with passports he had to obtain and, by way of good measure, prints the regulations which the French War Office established and which every correspondent had to demonstrate he could read and translate before being permitted to go to the front.

BRUCE BLIVEN prints in the New Republic for Dec. 1, an article entitled "The Hall-Press-Mills Case." Briefly he tells how that case is being covered by special correspondents and how eight daily newspapers have leased houses in Summerville for the use of their correspondents.

As EDITOR & PUBLISHER has had something to say about reporting this case the reader will be chiefly interested in what Mr. Bliven regards as most important. Here it is:

But most important of all, I think, is the widespread feeling that the case has taken the lid off a fairly typical respectable American town. Who doesn't want to know how his neighbors really misbehave? Well, here's how! Half of New Brunswick seems to have been in De Russey's lane that night; and for no purpose it would care to have written on the church bulletin board. Is there any reason to believe New Brunswick in 1922 was better or worse than any other town in 1926? None. Can you imagine that on Sept. 14, 1922, a Dionysiac wave, unprecedented and unrepeatable, struck this one community? The general population certainly doesn't believe any such a thing.

According to Mr. Bliven, the reading public believes that De Russey's Lanes are 10,000 in number and that the pathetic love letters of the enamored clergyman could be duplicated in every mail sack which Uncle Sam tosses from train to truck.

WANT to be a journalist? That is the question William Allen White answers in the American Boy for December. In making his reply he gives both sides.

Mr. White believes that newspaper work is much grayer now than it used to be. The reason is found, in part at least, in advertising. Mr. White says that modern advertising has turned newspapers into good money-makers. Consequently, they are under the control of men who are more interested in the money-making side than in the editorial side. He stresses the fact that such conditions make a gray outlook for the young newspaper man who may get tired of having the other fellow dictate.

Dictation as to what Mr. White should write is what forced him to leave the Kansas City Star, for which he had to sing too many tunes about the merits of Grover Cleveland and to buy the Emporia (Kan.) Gazette, for $3,000. The latter paper, in his opinion, is now worth at least a quarter of a million dollars.

On the subject of going to college Mr. White speaks as follows:

Of course, there are successful journalists who didn't go to college. They are self-made; got their background through reading and studying. But the man who has to make himself as he goes along is likely to stick about halfway up.

Go to college. If you can, take a four-year course in literature, science and the arts, as well as a good course in journalism. If after that you can study abroad, so much the better.

To the question, "If a boy likes both newspaper work and business, why can't he go into the business end of the work?" Mr. White answers:

He can. He should take, if possible, a course in journalism and a course in business administration. When he gets out of college, he's likely to become first an advertising salesman for a newspaper; then perhaps an advertising manager; then he may get to be owner of a newspaper or of an advertising agency. In either case, he'll have an influential voice in matters of newspaper policy.

Moreover, he's likely to start at say, $5 more a week than the young fellow who starts as a reporter; and he'll probably get a better salary all the way along, because he's closer to the money-making side of the paper. But if you like writing much better than business, you'll have to forget the salary differences.

Mr. White speaks through Esca G. Rodger and the editor prints in connection with the article a list of books for those who want to know more about journalism. In this list there are some notable omissions.

FROM a practical point of view, the most important article in the November issue of the Iowa Journalist—a monthly periodical published by the School of Journalism of the University of Iowa, Iowa City—is "Circulation-Distribution" contributed by Frederick J. Lazell, the editor. An editorial headed "A Full Waste Basket" attacks publicity seekers who try to get something for nothing.

ONE of the best critical chats about newspapers in general and New York sheets in particular may be found in the essay, "One Phase of Journalism," which Joseph S. Auerbach has put into his "Essays and Miscellanies" published by Harper & Brothers. The theme stressed in this essay is the editorial treatment of Edward M. Shepard when he was running for mayor of New York. Mr. Auerbach is extremely critical of such headlines for editorials as "A Shifty Shepard," "The Shepard of Shylock," etc. This note is inserted to answer the inquiry where one can find a legitimate criticism of the editorial page.

WHO first suggested the tabloid size for newspapers? The question is hard to answer. Certainly the idea is much older than recent magazine articles about tabloids would have you believe.

Whitelaw Reid, when editor of the New York Tribune, delivered on April 4, 1872, before New York University, a lecture on "The School of Journalism." After outlining the subjects that ought to be included in the curriculum of such journalistic course, Mr. Reid then took up some of the problems of journalism that he thought would soon come up for settlement. One of these problems was:

Whether we might therewith secure a more convenient shape for our papers; as, for example, by taking Henry Watterson's suggestive idea of an evening daily of the shape of The Saturday Review or The Nation, with its last six or eight pages surrendered to advertisements set without display, and this space made the most valuable and attractive on the paper by keeping a serial story from the pen of the best novelist money can command running on the lower half of each advertising page continuously.

From this remark by Mr. Reid it will be observed that as far back as 1872 Henry Watterson of the Louisville Courier Journal was suggesting a tabloid.

The address by Mr. Reid was issued first in booklet form. Later he put it in Volume II of "American and English Studies" (Charles Scribner's Sons).

HOW wags the world in China is discussed in Japan for December by Clifford Fox, Managing Editor of the North China Star, a Tientsin newspaper. Mr. Fox, who heads his story "The Dawn's Early Light in China," has not only the newspaperman's nose for news, but the scholar's mind to interpret the economics and sociology of the Far East.

In his contribution to Japan, Mr. Fox is not so much concerned with the present internal disturbances as news events, as he is with the movements that have caused the uprising. He attempts to peep into the future in China and sees a new era dawning on the Hills of Twang. But naturally what he has to say about the local press in China is of interest to newspapermen because he speaks from first hand information.

On this subject Mr. Fox says:

In the United States the newspapers accomplish the remarkable in cultivating and fostering and swaying public sentiment. The native and foreign press of China have tried to do this of late years, but they have made pretty much of a failure of the job thus far. The native press is without influence because the Chinese are educated sufficiently to know that their news and editorial columns are usually for sale to the highest bidder, and that the Chinese news agencies, without exception, are subsidized in one way or another by some clique or faction or individual. Any Chinese sufficiently educated to read the foreign newspapers published in China cannot but detect in their columns international jealousies all the time and racial propaganda some of the time. Pick up a foreign newspaper published in China and you find editorial columns devoted to praising one nation to the skies and minimizing the good points of others, while at the same time magnifying the latter's faults. The result is that the Chinese does not consider his newspaper as any educational factor, or any guide to follow in seeking to find out that which he seeks to know. He reads them, of course, but only to get an idea of what is going on. Realizing that the news agencies are subsidized—this does not apply to the only American news service operating in China today; it has just extended its service and is new in China and is altogether free of the subsidy taint—he then goes out to investigate on his own account and get at the truth of the story in which he is interested.

Because of the facts listed in the quotation just given Mr. Fox believes that public opinion in China is being formed in the guild halls, in the classrooms, in public mass meetings and to some extent on the lecture platform. He insists that an impassioned fiery speaker can do more with a few words of direct talk than he can with yards of carefully set solid type—so far as China is concerned. He frankly admits that there is some danger in having public opinion formed this way because China like her sister nation has her radicals. But her soap box orators for the most part are not extremists.

He concludes his chat about China with the remark that the present turmoil is only the price of transition—the price that any nation has to pay when it adjusts itself to another mode of living and hastens its pace that it may join the world in the onward march.

THOSE who write book reviews for newspapers will find some excellent examples of literary criticism in "Current Reviews" (Henry Holt & Company) by Lewis Worthington Smith, Professor of Comparative Literature at Drake University. If all those who want to write book reviews for the press purchase this volume it has some prospect of becoming a best-seller.

Professor Smith has assembled his reviews under four heads: (1) biographical and historical, (2) fiction, (3) reviews of poetry, drama and criticism, and (4) reviews of critical and social discussion. In his introduction the author offers numerous suggestions of practical value about the writing of book reviews. When one has finished reading the volume one ought to have some rather definite views about the main currents in the present deluge of books that flows from publishers' presses.

Glancing through the index I find that Professor Smith has taken two reviews from the Boston Transcript, two from the Chicago Evening Post, one from the Chicago News, one from the Christian Science Monitor, five from the New York Evening Post, seven from the New York Herald Tribune, seven from the New York Sun, seven from the New York Times and two from the New York World. In view of the excellence of the book reviews in some of the other newspapers it is surprising that more cities are not represented in the selection.

THE latest volume to reach my desk is "A World Cruise Log" (Harper & Bros.) by Joseph H. Appel, Director of Publicity of the John Wanamaker Store. The writer of such interesting advertising copy ought to be able to produce a travel book that is different from the mere guide books that flow in a continuous stream from publishers' presses. It would be somewhat surprising if the volume did not contain here and there some things that expressed the feminine point of view. It will be interesting to examine the chart and compass used by Mr. Appel and to print these observations at another time in this department.

A BOOK that belongs alongside of the dictionary in the newspaper office is "March's Thesaurus" of which a new edition has just been issued by the Historical Publishing Company of Philadelphia. This new edition makes the work much more useful in a newspaper office because of an amplified index.

Newspaper English which possesses the advantages of being clear will not suffer if it has the added advantage of having some beauty and charm in the presentation of facts. Indeed, the newspaper story will have added clearness if the reporter has a fine feeling for words and knows something about the history and the evolution of the English language. The sub-title of the present volume exactly describes the work, "a treasure house of words and knowledge."

"March's Thesaurus" is too well known to members of the working press to need any critical comment. Truthfully it can be said of it, "It stands alone—great in its solitude—solitary in its greatness."

ARTHUR GUTERMAN whose rhymed reviews of books have added to his popularity as a poet seeks in the American Magazine for December to interpret the term news in lines that rhyme. He finds that news rhymes with stews and clews. His interpretation of news, therefore, is remarkably free from poetical license.

How well he has caught the spirit of the stuff that makes newspapers is shown by the following two stanzas which comprise the poem he calls "News":

Daily the world is the scene
Of their huntings again:
Warm-hearted, cynical, keen,
Irrepressible men
Follow the Rumor that flies
Like a derelict soul,
Winnowing Guesses and Lies
From Equator to Pole,
Knowing the palace's mirth
And the reek of the stews,
Searching the quarters of Earth
For the Staple of News.
News! News! News!
Crumbs of Humanity! Sweepings of History! News!

News of the death of a king,
Or a feast, or a war;
News of the track and the ring
And the sail and the oar;
Themes for the roll book of Time
Or the talk of a day;
Glory and folly and crime
Or the strivings of the clay.
Packet and budget are filled,
And the magical clews
Threading all ether are thrilled
With the pulsings of News.
News! News! News!
Tattle of Continents! Peeps at the Universe! News!

EL MUNDO WINS FIRST MEXICAN LIBEL SUIT

Tampico Paper Victor When Politician Withdraws Suit as Jury Is Being Drawn—Filed Under New Law

(Special to EDITOR & PUBLISHER)

The first real libel suit in the history of Mexican journalism has ended with an unqualified victory for the defendant, Vicente Villasana, director of El Mundo of Tampico, just as the jury was being selected for the trial.

The suit, the outcome of vigorous attacks made by Villasana against Salvador Ibarra Torres, a prominent Tampico politician, because of armed threats of violence made by Torres against Antonio Gabucio, a Tampico newspaper man, last March, was instituted, according to Excelsior of Mexico City, in accordance with Mexico's Printing Law, formulated recently at the initiative of the Prensa Asociada of Mexico.

Following Villasana's editorial attacks in El Mundo, Torres took the matter to the courts. Prospective jurors were impaneled and selection of the jury was begun on November 18. The affair excited great interest, and when the proceedings began at 10 o'clock that day the court room was crowded with persons of all social classes, including Tampico's entire journalistic world.

Just as the questioning of the prospective jurors was to begin, Torres appeared in court and presented a writ withdrawing his complaint against El Mundo, explaining that in so doing he was motivated entirely by personal reasons.

Some regret has been expressed that the suit was not carried through and made a test case, as Villasana had engaged for his defense the two eminent lawyers, Eugenio Mendez and Crescencio Gonzalez, who were instrumental in drawing up the Printing Law.

Attempts have been made in the past to bring libel suits against newspapers in Mexico, but so far as can be learned, no such case has ever been admitted into the courts. Even these attempts have been few, as politicians attacked by publishers have generally resorted to the simple expedient of a shooting match to gain justice.

PROBERT'S HOME BURNS

Homeland, farm home at Olney, Md., sixteen miles from Washington, D. C., of L. C. Probert, superintendent of the Washington bureau of the Associated Press, was burned to the ground shortly after noon Dec. 4. Mrs. Probert, trapped in a second story room, with dense smoke and flames preventing an escape, was rescued by her husband, who placed a ladder on the outside of the house and caught her as she slid down a roof made perilously slippery by a heavy hailstorm that struck the vicinity Saturday night and Sunday. Mr. Probert was burned slightly about the face.

TO STUDY DRY MATS AND NEWSPRINT WASTE

These Subjects First to Be Scrutinized
by New A. N. P. A. Mechanical Department, Wines Announces in Letter

Dry mats and newsprint waste will be the first two mechanical subjects to be taken up by the new mechanical department of the American Newspaper Publishers Association, W. E. Wines, department manager, announced this week.

In a letter sent out to all A. N. P. A. members, Mr. Wines outlined in detail the department's plans. The letter follows:

"It is a pleasure to announce that the mechanical department is now ready to function, and invites the closest contact with the membership.

"Of the multitude of subjects worthy of investigation, the committee has selected the dry mat as of the first importance, in the belief that the need of publishers for information on this subject is most pressing. A bulletin on this subject is now being prepared and will be issued at the earliest possible date.

"Newsprint waste is probably the largest item of reducible expense with which publishers are burdened. A rough, but conservative, estimate of the annual loss to publishers from this source places the figure at $10,000,000. It is believed that the mechanical department can surely find means to reduce this loss. Should we succeed in effecting a reduction of but one per cent of the present loss, the saving will pay the cost of the department and leave a handsome surplus. Newsprint waste is, therefore, the next subject to be investigated.

"The success of this department will depend in great part upon your active co-operation. If you, or any member of your organization, have any information on dry mats which may be of value and assistance in the preparation of this bulletin, you are urged to send it at the earliest possible date to W. E. Wines, 270 Madison Avenue, N. Y. If you are experiencing any difficulty in the use of dry mats or have any questions on the subject which you desire to have answered, a letter from you at an early date will be appreciated. It is desired to make this bulletin as correct, authoritative, and comprehensive as is possible in the present state of the art. To this end your co-operation is essential.

"A letter from you giving the name and title of the person (or persons) in your organization to whom you wish mechanical department bulletins to be mailed is also requested. It is the wish of the committee that the information collected by the department be available to every individual in the member organizations to whom it may be of value.

"There is considerable correspondence between newspaper offices seeking information on mechanical matters. It will be desirable to gradually direct all such correspondence to the mechanical department. This procedure will keep the department advised as to the subjects which are of live, current interest to publishers and will result in the accumulation of a store of valuable and useful information which will be available to all the membership. Will you, therefore, kindly forward to the department originals or copies of all such inquiries, together with copy of your reply, if any?

"Your co-operation is necessary in order that this department may be of the greatest value to you. Suggestions as to useful lines of endeavor are most particularly desired. Requests for information on specific problems will receive prompt and careful attention and will be considered as thoroughly as the nature of the subject and present facilities will allow."

TWO YEARS FOR FRAUD AD

Harold Melton Stunz, proprietor of the Melton Laboratories, Inc., of Kansas City, Mo., was sentenced to two years in the federal penitentiary and fined $10,000 by Judge Merrill E. Otis of the federal court in Kansas City December 4 following conviction on a charge of using the mails to defraud in the sale of "life restoring" drugs. Judge Otis laid much of the blame on publications which publish and still are publishing advertisements of fake medicines. Attorneys for Stunz had filed motion for a new trial on grounds that the newspapers in Kansas City prejudiced the jury by articles printed before and during the trial.

SCHOLZ LEAVES FOR COAST

Veteran Circulation Man Plans Extensive Vacation in Pasadena

Ernest A. Scholz, who for many years was circulation manager and later business manager of the Chicago Record-Herald and who came to New York in 1914 to become circulation director of the Crowell Publishing Company and later the Butterick Company, has gone to Pasadena, Cal., to reside permanently because of the continued ill health of his wife. For a short time previous to his departure he did some special work for the United States Daily in Washington.

Mr. Scholz is a brother of Emil Maurice Scholz, formerly publisher of the New York Evening Post and now the owner and active head of the World Wide Advertising Corporation of New York; and also a brother of Charles G.

Scholz who is general superintendent of branch agencies of the Crowell Publishing Company in New York.

Mr. Scholz was the first circulation executive successfully to carry out in detail the branch circulation reading club idea now in such successful vogue in the larger magazines. He was one of the original Victor F. Lawson "boys" that is, one of the men who rose with the development of the Chicago Daily News and Chicago Record in the early days of that famous publisher.

Mr. Scholz is planning a short stretch of leisure in California, and expects to re-enter business later.

THE Portland Express has a feature, "Broker Comment," on its financial page in which the various heads of the local brokerage houses predict the future of the market. The names of the houses are mentioned and the value of that semi-weekly comment is considered inestimable by the financial writer. This feature draws advertising.—L. E. Richwager.

A good used car selling stunt which increases sales of used cars and which calls for the use of considerable newspaper advertising space by the dealer is for the dealer to advertise that he will stage a special sale of used cars and will open this sale by selling two used cars, guaranteed to be worth $100 each, for 99c each to the first two persons who have their hands on the locks of his used car yard at 9 or 10 o'clock on the opening day of the sale. This has been done by several used car dealers with splendid results. Get some dealer in your city to put this across and increase your advertising lineage by getting him to advertise the event extensively in your paper.—Frank H. Williams.

Banks are always looking for new ideas in advertising. If your town is one where there are frequent newcomers, your bank can easily use the idea of a San Diego bank which is meeting with unusual success. Every Saturday night it runs an advertisement giving the former towns of the new depositors for the past week.—Thora Eigenmann.

A new twist was given the "complimentary advertisement" by the Dayton Journal during Vaudeville Anniversary Week when that newspaper published an advertisement by a group of merchants with establishments near the B. F. Keith theatre. The double-page advertisement was illustrated with a cut showing the business district surrounding the Keith theatre, with welcoming and congratulatory hands extended toward the theatre from the business houses which paid for the advertisement. The "congratulatory hands" were sketched on the photograph by a staff artist.—S. M. Ballard.

Teaching doctors, professional men and business men the value of advertising as well as helping its Christmas fund are results of "Howling 'Em Out," a Christmas feature of the Seattle Post-Intelligencer. This department runs a few snappy lines addressed to the business and professional men and collects for this little "ad" a contribution to the Christmas fund.—C. M. L., Seattle.

The Miami Herald on Saturdays calls attention to the housewives, in a front page box, of food bargains advertised throughout the paper. Each food advertiser, both local and national, is listed with the page and section where the ad appears. It's a directory for the convenience of the food shoppers. This little extra service and donated space builds good-will with both readers and advertisers.—Robert B. Miller.

Many large firms are now advertising "Living Christmas Trees for Christmas" in national magazines. Why not get your local florists or nursery men to offer these in your own city in fancy containers or small tubs? There is the prospect of good advertising space being sold.—Henry R. "STRIKING Sentences from Sunday Sermons" is the catchy two and sometimes three and four-column head used by some papers to help brighten up an early page for the Monday morning, or for that matter, Monday afternoon issues. Half-column cuts of the pastors quoted also serve to make the feature attractive from a typographical as well as human interest standpoint.—G.L.S.

Following a local Elks Club rally at which many of the old favorites were sung, the Provo (Utah) Evening Herald printed two days later parts of several of these songs and invited their readers to write the titles thereof, the first verse, the chorus or the complete song. Also, to select their favorite old song, write a story of 75 words telling why it is the favorite and send all to the paper. Prizes were offered those giving the most information.—F. Bennett.

Ask your star carrier boy some of the excuses he gets when he calls to collect for the newspaper. Write it up in the vernacular of the boy. It's a good human interest story and incidentally helps the boys collect next time without seeming to be a reminder.—Thora Eigenmann.

One of the Madison, Wis., papers now publishes a boxed paragraph in boldface each morning, headed "On the Editorial Page Today." The box lists the titles of the editorials and any special features. A survey shows that editorial reading has materially increased since this was started.—Alexander Gottlieb.

CROWDS ATTEND OPEN HOUSE

Police Called to Protect Windows of Longview (Wash.) Daily News

The open house and reception of the Longview (Wash.) Daily News held Dec. 2 to display the new stereotype press and other equipment attracted such a throng that the police had to be called out to protect the plate glass windows in the building. It was necessary to let a few hundred in at a time to inspect the plant, which was in operation, before others could be let in.

Part of the program was having the visitors register. Their names were then set on the machines, mats made, the plates cast, and a press run made with the name appearing in the paper which was handed the visitor as it came from the press. A display of food products advertised in the Daily News was a feature of the entertainment. The hours were from seven to nine and at seven 3,000 people were at the building.

will add to the "human" element of your stories.—Cyril E. Lamb.

Small town papers find it difficult to handle the annual rush of "Letters to Santa." Ignoring these missives of repetitious gift requests creates no end of ill-will and telephone calls "why wasn't my Santa letter printed?"

The Jeanette (Pa.) News-Dispatch has adopted this method: under one column box head "I'm On My Way To Answer Your Letter," appears a cut from a mat of a Santa Claus in the act of running. Beneath this is printed "Santa Claus has acknowledged receiving letters sent to the News-Dispatch by: (then the list of names of children and addresses in black face), followed by "Santa adds that he'll do his best to oblige the young folks and follow out their requests, even though he has a tremendous job before him this year."

This type matter is permitted to stand. Each day only the new list of names of children writing letters, is changed.—George H. Scruton.

FACTS ABOUT NEW ENGLAND—

No. 8—

THE METAL TRADES—

AS A CONTRIBUTOR TO NEW ENGLAND'S WEALTH—

New England has always been noted for the high quality of its metal products. Throughout the New England States are hundreds of manufacturers both large and small, manufacturing small articles requiring a high degree of skill and workmanship.

In one district alone, foundries and machine shops turn out annually products amounting to more than $56,000,000; tools and cutlery from 55 factories add $18,000,000 more to the annual output of metal products. The largest safety razor manufacturing plant in the world is located in New England. 10 million razors and over a half billion blades are produced annually and distributed to every country throughout the world.

The metal trades of New England in themselves offer a tremendous market for national advertisers. They are buyers of numerous products that they must use in their own industry. Most of the employees are skilled mechanics whose earnings are exceptionally high.

They are easy to reach and to influence because they are intelligent and read newspapers. The papers listed below can be of great assistance in getting to these buyers.

Producing Results for NEWSPAPER PUBLISHERS in the World's Greatest Market

THE SUN's large circulation among the business men of New York—among executives and heads of commercial houses—makes it an exceptionally profitable medium for the newspaper publisher who has a story to tell to the large number of national advertisers located in New York.

Here are some of the newspapers which have used space in THE SUN during the first eleven months of 1926:

BOSTON EVENING TRANSCRIPT	NEW YORK DAILY NEWS
BOSTON GLOBE	NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE
BOSTON HERALD AND TRAVELER	NEW YORK EVENING ENQUIRER
BOSTON POST	NEW YORK EVENING JOURNAL
CHICAGO DAILY NEWS	NEW YORK EVENING POST
CHICAGO EVENING AMERICAN	NEW YORK TELEGRAM
CHICAGO HERALD AND EXAMINER	NEW YORK TIMES
CHICAGO JOURNAL OF COMMERCE	NEW YORK WORLD
CHICAGO TRIBUNE	PHILADELPHIA BULLETIN
CINCINNATI TIMES-STAR	PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER
DETROIT FREE PRESS	ST. LOUIS GLOBE-DEMOCRAT
DETROIT NEWS	ST. LOUIS POST-DISPATCH
NEW YORK AMERICAN	SCRIPPS-HOWARD NEWSPAPERS
NEW YORK EVENING GRAPHIC	UNITED STATES DAILY
NEW YORK DAILY MIRROR	WALL STREET JOURNAL

The recent investigation conducted by the Department of Advertising and Marketing of New York University to determine the popularity of New York newspapers among advertising men shows that:

THE SUN has a larger circulation among the Advertising Managers and the Agency Executives of New York than any other weekday newspaper—morning or evening.

To sell newspaper space in New York—advertise in the New York newspaper that reaches the largest number of buyers of advertising—advertise in THE SUN

NEW YORK EVENING NEWSPAPERS

	1st 11 Months 1926	1st 11 Months 1925	Gain	Loss

Eve. World	20,516	24,140	3,624

According to this investigation, which was made by the University at the instigation of the New York Herald-Tribune:

—68 per cent of the Advertising Managers in New York read THE SUN.

—71 per cent of the Agency Executives in New York read THE SUN.

That newspaper owners are receiving satisfactory results through THE SUN is indicated not only by the fact that they buy more space in THE SUN than in all the other New York evening newspapers combined—but also by the fact that during the first eleven months of 1926 THE SUN's gain in Newspaper Advertising was more than double the combined gains of all the other New York evening newspapers.
